S. Gregory.

at Constantinople. Asoon as he had a Copy of it, he gave it to Anastasius the Patriarch of Antioch, who translated it into Greek. St. Leander desir'd it of St. Gregory. In fine, this Book quickly spread over all the Churches, and the Bishops look'd upon it as their Rule: But chiefly those of France judg'd it so necessary, that they ordain'd in many Synods held in the ninth Age, that the Bishops should be obliged to understand it and to live according to the Rules prescribed in it: And to the end that this Obligation might the more readily be remembred, it was put into their hand at the time of their Ordination (f).

'Tis not without reason that this Book is so highly valued in France, for indeed it contains Instructions of great Importance, and very good Rules about the Pastoral Office. 'Tis divided into four Parts. After a Letter to John Bishop of Ravenna, to whom St. Gregory addressed this Book, because he had reprov'd him for refusing the Priesthood so obstinately; He begins with shewing what Rashness it was for any one to undertake the Conduct of Souls, who had neither the Capacity nor Knowledge necessary for discharging it well; which he calls the Art of Arts, and Science of Sciences. He deplores the Blindness of those who are so unhappy as to seek after Ecclesiastical Offices, under pretence of promoting the Salvation of Souls by their Direction, when indeed they have no other Design but to satisfie their own ambitious Desire of Honour, of appearing learned and able Men, and of being exalted above others. He bemoans the People who are under the Conduct of such ambitious and ignorant Men, who can neither instruct them by their Example nor by word of mouth. He adds, that this Ignorance of Pastors is often a Punishment of their disorderly Life, and that God by a just Judgment suffers their Ignorance to be an occasion of falling to those who follow them. From those that are ignorant, he passes to those who have acquired Knowledge by their Industry, but never reduc'd it into Practice; and on the contrary have defil'd their Feet by walking in a way unbecoming the Truths which they have learned. He cannot endure those Men who are very forward to teach others that which they never practise, and who are a Scandal to the Church, by a Life perfectly contrary to the Truths which they teach. He would have Pastors to be of such a Disposition as to despise the Glory, the Dignities, and the Prosperity of this World, to fear neither the Terrors nor Threatnings of it, to be ready to suffer for the Defence of the Truth, and to shun the Pleasures of this Life.

Altho' he was persuaded that the Duties of the Pastoral Office wearied the Mind, yet he would not have those Persons, who are fit to conduct Souls, and may be useful to others by their Doctrine and Example, to prefer their own Ease before the Care of Souls. Upon this Principle he does equally reprove those, whose Humility makes them shun Ecclesiastical Offices, so as obstinately to oppose the Order of Providence, and those who desire them passionately, and importunately seek after them. He would have him who has the Qualifications necessary for being a Guide of Souls, to yield when he is urg'd to accept that Office; and on the contrary, he advises him who is not qualified, never to engage himself, tho he were never so much urg'd to accept the Office. After he has laid down this Maxim, he enlarges upon the particular Qualifications which belong to those who should accept of a Bishoprick, and the Defects which should make others decline it.

In the second Part St. Gregory treats of the Duties of the Pastoral Office, when one is promoted to this Dignity by lawful and canonical Ways. He shews that there ought to be a great Difference between the Virtue of a Pastor and his People; and that a Pastor ought to have the following Qualifications. That all his Thoughts must be pure, that in Virtue he ought to excel others, that Prudence and Discretion should govern his Silence, that his Speech should be useful and edifying, that he should be tender and compassionate to all the World, that he should be sublime in Contemplation, and lowly in Humility, preferring all others above himself, that his Zeal for Justice should prompt him to oppose the Vices of bad Men, that his Employment in external things should diminish nothing of the Care he ought to take of those which are internal, and that the Application he ought to use to such things as concern the Soul, ought not to take him off from the due Care of regulating external Matters. These are the Qualifications of a true Pastor, on which St. Gregory enlarges in the second Part.

In the third he treats of the Instructions which Pastors ought to give their Flocks, and applies himself particularly to shew, after what manner they ought to be varied, according to the different Qualities and Dispositions of those whom they instruct, whereof some are to be admonish'd, and others to be instructed. As for example, they must prescribe to Men things more excellent and more difficult to exercise their Virtue, whereas nothing must be enjoyn'd to Women but what is soft and easie: Younger People must be treated more mildly than those that are old; the Poor must be comforted; the Rich must be humbled: The Sorrows of Hell must be represented to those who are merrily disposed, and to those who are sad, the Joys of another Life: Those who are Inferiors, must be admonish'd to be subject, and those who are in high Places, not to be proud: Obedience must be recommended to Servants, and Meekness to Masters: Those who think themselves learned, must be moved to despise their Learning, and the Ignorant must be instructed in true Knowledge. 'Tis good to use sharp Reproofs to those who are impudent, whereas we must seek for mild Ways to reclaim those that are modest. The Presumptuous must be abashed and humbled, whereas the Timorous must be exhorted and encouraged. The Sick need other Instructions than those that are in Health. In a word, a Pastor must proportion his Instructions, Advices, Reproofs and Exhortations, to the Constitution, the State, the Temper, Inclinations and Customs, to the Virtues and Vices of those to whom he speaks. In this second Part of St. Gregory's Pastoral you may find a wonderful Diversity of particular Advices, which will be of great use for Confessors, and for all those who are engaged by their Ministry to guide others. After St. Gregory has given these private Instructions, he proceeds to those which concern publick Offices, and admonishes Preachers to take good heed, lest they so commend Virtues to their Auditors, as to give them occasion to fall into the contrary Vices. He would have Humility so preach'd to the Proud, as not to increase the Fear of timorous Persons; the slothful so excited to Diligence, as those who are too active may not take occasion to be too eager in Business. The Impatient must be so rebuked, as not to inspire Negligence into the Slothful. The Covetous must be so exhorted to give liberally, as not to authorize Prodigality. Virginity and a State of Continence must be so praised, as not to give occasion to blame Marriage, nor despise the Fruitfulness of married Persons. In fine, his Hearers on the one side are to be excited in such a manner to do good, that on the other side they may not be persuaded to that which is evil. What is more perfect is so to be praised before them, that they take no occasion to despise a lesser Perfection: And they must be so exhorted to be faithful in little things, that they may not imagine these to be sufficient, and by this Conceit neglect to labour after those that are higher and more sublime. The last thing whereof St. Gregory admonishes Preachers, is, that they should say nothing in their Instructions which is above the Capacity of those who hear them, lest their Mind being too intent, grow weary and disrelish it: But above all he recommends to them, that they instruct the People more by their Example than their Discourses.

The fourth Part is nothing but a Reflection upon the the Obligation which all Pastors have to retire within themselves, and to humble themselves before God for fear lest they take occasion to grow proud for discharging the Duties of their Office. He ends this Work with this humble Conclusion. You see, my dear Friend, what your chiding has obliged me to write unto you: But while I thus labour to shew what manner of Man a true Pastor should be, I do just like a very filthy and ugly Painter, who should represent upon Canvass the figure of a very comely and well-shap'd Man: I intrude into the Office of Conducting others to the Port of Perfection, while I my self am toss'd with the Floods of my own Passions and Vices. I conjure you therefore to endeavour to support me by the merit of your Prayers, as by a Plank, in the shipwrack of this present Life, that so feeling my self sink in the Waters of the Tempestuous Sea of this World, by the weight of my own Inclinations, your charitable Hand may relieve me, and raise me up above the Water.

The Homilies upon Ezekiel are of the number of those which St. Gregory preach'd to his People. Nevertheless he review'd them that he might make them publick, about eight years after they were preached. They are address'd to Marinianus Bishop of Ravenna, and divided into two Books. The first contains twelve Homilies upon the three first Chapters of Ezekiel, and upon a part of the fourth. St. Gregory was forc'd by his urgent Affairs to break off the Course of this Exposition, and therefore he did only explain

S. Gregory. the Viſion of an Houſe built upon a Mountain, which is related in the fortieth Chapter of this Prophet. This afforded him a Subject for ten Homilies, which make the ſecond Book of the Homilies upon Ezekiel. He handles things in theſe Homilies much after the ſame manner as he does in his Morals upon Job, altho' he does not enlarge ſo much upon them.

He was alſo obliged to reviſe his Homilies upon the Goſpels, which he had caus'd to be read to the People, or had preach'd himſelf in the Church, becauſe Copies of them had been diſtributed as they were either dictated or ſpoken. The Collection of them is alſo divided into two Books. The firſt contains the twenty firſt Homilies which he dictated to his Secretaries; and the ſecond the twenty laſt which he preach'd himſelf.

Altho' there can be no doubt but the Dialogues which go under the Name of St. Gregory, are indeed this Pope's, ſince he himſelf owns them (g), and his Diſciples (b), and the Authors who wrote within a little while after him, do attribute them to him, yet this Work does not appear worthy of the gravity and diſcretion of this holy Pope, 'tis ſo full of extraordinary Miracles and Hiſtories almoſt incredible. 'Tis true he reports them upon the Credit of others, but then he ſhould not ſo eaſily believe them, and vent them afterwards for things that are certain. This Work is divided into four Books, written by way of Dialogue between St. Gregory, who relates what he had learn'd, and Peter the Deacon, who puts Queſtions to him from time to time about theſe Hiſtories. The Style is no ways ſublime, the Hiſtories are there related after a very ſimple and plain manner, without any art or pleaſantneſs. The Interruptions of Peter are often impertinent, and always inſipid. The Hiſtories related in it are many times grounded only upon the Relations of ignorant old Men, or common Reports. Miracles there are ſo frequent, ſo extraordinary and often times for matters of ſmall conſequence, that 'tis very difficult to believe them all. There are Stories in it which can very hardly be reconciled with the Life of thoſe of whom he ſpeaks, as the voluntary impriſonment of Paulinus in Africa, under the King of the Vandals. Viſions, Apparitions, Dreams, are there in greater numbers than in any other Author: And therefore St. Gregory confeſſes, towards the latter end, that the things of another World had been more diſcover'd in his time, than in all the Ages preceding. But I do not believe that any Man will warrant all theſe Relations. Leaving others therefore to their liberty of judging as they pleaſe, I ſhall ſay no more about them, but only ſubjoyn here an Abridgment of the greater part of them.

Honoratus Abbot of a Monaſtery of Fundi, being preſent at a Feaſt, where there was nothing but Meat, made a ſcruple to eat of it; and while the Gueſts rallied him, becauſe he was in a place where nothing elſe was to be had, a Servant went out to draw ſome water, and brought in a great fiſh in a Pitcher. The ſame Abbot by his Prayers ſtop'd a Rock which was ready to fall with great force upon his Monaſtery. Libertinus his Diſciple hindred the Horſes of the Goths from paſſing the River, to make his own Horſe come to him: He raiſed alſo a dead Infant. A Gardiner of this Monaſtery plac'd a Serpent in ambuſcade againſt a Robber. The Abbot Equitius, a Founder of many Monaſteries, was miraculouſly deliver'd from the Temptations of the Fleſh, in a Viſion, wherein he thought that he was made an Eunuch. A Biſhop having brought before him a Monk who was a Magician, he judg'd him; and after he had watch'd him for ſome time, he caus'd him to be turn'd out of his Monaſtery. This Monk confeſs'd that he had many times lifted up into the Air the Cell of St. Equitius, without being able to do him any hurt. A Nun having greedily taken a Lettuce in a Garden without making the ſign of the Croſs, was poſſeſs'd with a Devil. St. Equitius dipoſſeſs'd her, after he had made the Devil confeſs that he was upon this Lettuce: The Pope having ſent to hinder him from preaching, was admoniſh'd in a Dream to permit him. Peter asks upon this occaſion, how ſo great a Pope could be miſtaken as to a Perſon of ſo eminent Virtue. St. Gregory anſwers him, that this was not to be wondred at, ſince all Men are liable to miſtakes, Fallimur, quia homines ſumus, Popes as well as others. Conſtantius Church-warden of the Church of St. Stephen at Ancona, having no Oyl to light the Lamps, fill'd them with Water, and after he had kindled the Wicks, they maintain'd the flame as if the Lamps had been full of Oyl. Marcellinus Biſhop of that City, expos'd himſelf to the flames of a Fire, and by that means ſtop'd it. Nonnoſus a Monk of Mount Sinai, remov'd by his Prayers a part of a Rock, to make room for a Garden belonging to his Monaſtery. A Glaſs-Lamp being broken, he gather'd the little pieces of it together before the Altar, and after he had pray'd he found the Lamp entire. The Abbot Anaſtaſius was admoniſhed of his own death, and the death of ſeven of his Monks, by a Voice which call'd them one after another. Boniface Biſhop of Ferentinum, multiplied Wine, foretold the death of a Beggar and miraculouſly receiv'd pieces of Gold, that he might reſtore them to his Kinſman, from whom he had taken them to give Alms to the Poor. Fortunatus Biſhop of Tudentinum, chas'd the Devil out of thoſe who were poſſeſs'd, reſtor'd ſight to the Blind, cur'd a mad Horſe, heal'd a broken Bone, and rais'd the Dead. A Prieſt call'd Severus rais'd one from the Dead, that he might have time to do Penance. Theſe are a part of the Miracles contain'd in the firſt Book. S. Gregory.

The ſecond Book contains the Life and Miracles of St. Benedict. There he relates after what manner this Saint going out of Rome, was detain'd ſome time at Anſidena, where by a Miracle he made a Sieve whole which his Nurſe had broken. Afterwards he ſpeaks of his Retirement to Sublacum. He deſcribes the voluntary Puniſhment which he inflicted upon himſelf, by rolling himſelf ſtark naked for a conſiderable time upon Thorns, to conquer the Temptations of the Fleſh. He does not forget to obſerve, that he being invited into a Monaſtery, whoſe Monks had a mind to poiſon him, broke the Glaſs wherein the Poiſon was preſented to him, by making the ſign of the Croſs. He relates many other Miracles of the ſame Nature. A Monk was cur'd of his Diſtraction by blows with a ſtick; a Spring was found upon the top of a Mountain. The Iron of a Spade being caſt into a Lake, came up again above the Water, and joyn'd it ſelf to the Haft. A Monk of St. Maur walk'd upon the Water to fetch out Brother Placidus who was drown'd. A Stone which the Devil had made unmoveable, was eaſily remov'd by his Prayers. The ſeeming flames which were caus'd by an Idol, were extinguiſh'd. A young Monk cruſhed by the fall of a Wall, was rais'd to Life again. The knowledge of things hidden, and the Prediction of things future did never fail him. An Eccleſiaſtical Perſon was delivered from a Devil, and afterwards poſſeſs'd a-new, for aſpiring to Holy Orders which this Saint had forbidden him. Two hundred Meaſures of Corn were found at the Gate of a Monaſtery, at a time when there was great need of it. The Nuns threatned with Excommunication by St. Benedict, who died a little while after, did viſibly go out of the Church, when the Deacon ordered thoſe who were Excommunicated to retire; but he took off this Excommunication, and after the Offering was preſented for them which he bleſſed, they were never more ſeen to go out as before. A young Hermit who was gone out of a Monaſtery without leave, dying in his own Houſe was buried, and the next day after his Body was found above ground. His Kinſfolk had recourſe to St. Benedict, who gave them the Communion of the Body of our Saviour, and order'd them to put it upon the Breaſt of the deceaſed, and then to bury him with it; which being done he continued after that under ground. A Leper was cur'd by his Prayers: A Bottle of Oyl thrown down from a high place was preſerv'd whole: Sometimes he got Money, and ſometimes Oyl. He cur'd an Hermit poſſeſs'd of a Devil. He loos'd a Country-man who was bound faſt, only by his own looks. He raiſed a dead Infant. His Siſter, St. Scholaſtica, raiſed a furious ſtorm, to force him to lye at her Houſe. He ſaw his own Soul aſcend to Heaven in the ſhape of a Dove. He had alſo another Viſion wherein he perceived the Soul of Germanus Biſhop of Capua, which the Angels carried up to Heaven. He foretold his own Death, which was followed with Miracles. S. Gregory.

The third Book contains the Virtues and Miracles of many Saints of Italy. There it is related that Paulinus Biſhop of Nola went into Africa, to render himſelf a Priſoner to the King of the Vandals, that he might deliver the only Son of a Widow of his own Country; and that he being diſcover'd by a miraculous Viſion, did not only obtain his own Deliverance, but alſo the Deliverance of all the Priſoners of War: That a Horſe on which Pope John mounted, would never after carry a Woman, and that this Pope cur'd a blind Man at Conſtantinople: That Pope Agapetus heal'd a lame Man; that Dacius Biſhop of Milan deliver'd a Houſe from Spectres which the Devil made to appear there; That Sabinus Biſhop of Lanuſa, being blind, knew every thing that paſs'd, and one day his Archdeacon having preſented to him Poiſon by a Servant, he would not drink it, but order'd the Servant to drink it, and afterwards having

In Ch. 7. of B. 1. of his Dialogues, he relates the Hiſtory of Nonnoſus, and ſays that he learn'd it from Maximian: And in many of his Homilies you may find the ſame Hiſtories, which are related in theſe Dialogues in the ſame Words.

(b) His Diſciples] Paterius Secretary to St. Gregory, in the Collection which he made out of this Father's Works, recites a great number of paſſages taken out of the Dialogues: Some of them alſo may be ſeen in the Collection of Taius Biſhop of Saragoſa, who liv'd in 630. Ildefonſus of Toledo ranks this Work amongſt St. Gregory's. Hilary of Toledo, Bede, Paul the Deacon, John the Deacon, Hadrian the firſt, Anaſtaſius the Library-keeper, Alcuinus, Hincmarus, Paſchaſius, and Prudentius quote it; Photius ſpeaks of it. I ſay nothing of an infinite number of later Authors.

S. Gregory. hindred him from doing it, he drunk it off himself, after he had made the Sign of the Cross, without receiving any hurt, and order'd the Boy to go and tell him who had given him this Poison, that he should not be Bishop; and indeed the Arch-deacon died immediately. 'Tis also reported in the same Book, that Andrew Bishop of Fundi, being tempted by a Nun who dwelt in his House, was restrained by an Adventure pleasant enough. A Jew having stopped near the place where formerly the Temple of Apollo at Fundi stood, heard there the Devils give an account to their Prince of what they had done; and among them there was one who boasted, that he had inspir'd this Temptation into Andrew. This Jew having found out this Bishop, discover'd to him what he had heard; which mov'd this Bishop to turn out of his House, not only this Nun, but also all the other Women, that there might be no occasion for a Temptation. A Bishop of Luca chang'd the Course of a River, by his own word only: Another stop'd the Inundation of the Po by a Letter. Others are preserv'd from their Enemies, from Serpents, and from Savage Beasts. A Hermit raised one from the Dead. A new Nun chas'd away the Devil. A Robber was seiz'd at the Sepulchre of a Holy Priest. In short, there were many other Miracles of this Nature in this Book: And there he speaks also of some Christians who suffer'd for the Faith under the Lombards.

In the Fourth Book he undertakes to treat of the state of the Soul after Death, and to refute the Opinion of some, who without separating from the Church, doubted whether the Soul liv'd after its separation from the Body. There he observes, that 'tis not to be wondred, that Man being born Carnal, and not being able to feel invisible things, should be hardly brought to believe them; that notwithstanding Men must of necessity believe such things as they do not feel: That there are three sorts of Spirits; Spirits which are never united to any Flesh, and Spirits which are united to it, but do not dye with it, and Spirits which are united to Flesh, and dye with the Body. The Angels are the first sort, the Souls of Men are the second, and the Souls of Beasts are the third. He answers a passage of Ecclesiastes, where 'tis said that Beasts and Men die alike, by affirming that it is a Question propos'd by the Author, and not his Decision of it. He adds, that we must not wonder that we do not see the Soul go out of the Body, since it is not seen even in the Body, and that as it discovers it self when it is in the Body by its Motions, so it does also when it is out of the Body by the Miracles of the Saints; that moreover the Eyes of the Body cannot perceive the Soul, since it is invisible, but the Just do purifie the Eyes of their Mind. To prove this, he brings the Examples of many, whose Souls have been seen after their Death; or of Saints, who have seen at the time of their death, either Jesus Christ or the Virgin, or some of the Saints. As to the state of Souls after death, he says, that those of the Just, who are perfect, are receiv'd into Heaven; that those of them who are not so perfect, are detain'd in certain Receptacles; and that those of the Wicked are thrown into Hell-fire, which torments them, altho' it be Corporeal. He thinks it no more difficult to explain the manner, whereby it causes pain in the other Life than in this. He believes that the Damned know the happiness of the Just, and the Blessed the misery of the Damned. He maintains expresly that there is a Purgatory, for expiating the slight faults of those who have deserved this Grace, by the Good Actions which they did in this Life *. He observes that many things have been discovered a little while ago which were unknown in Antiquity, concerning the state of Souls after Death; the reason which he gives for it is this, that at the end of the World drawing near, the Transactions of the other begin to be discover'd. He thinks it probable enough that Hell is under Ground, and that there is but one Fire in it, which burns some more and some less, according to the proportion of the number and heinousness of their Crimes. He proves that the Fire of Hell shall never end. He would not have Credit given to all sorts of Dreams, tho' he does not doubt but by some of them God reveals things to come. He believes that it is profitable for the Dead, who are not accused of Crimes, to be interr'd in Holy Places, because their Sepulchres put in mind to pray to God for them, that among the Prayers which relieve the Dead, the Oblation of the Holy Sacrifice is the most profitable †; but that it most safe for one to expiate his own Faults by his own Sacrifices and Prayers, while he is in this Life, than to expect the Relief of others after his Death, that he must offer up himself while the Host is offer'd, bewail his Sins, and never commit them any more; and lastly, he must pardon others, that he may obtain pardon of his own Faults.

These are all the Works which are certainly known to be St. Gregory's. For altho' there have been publish'd for a long time under his Name in the common Editions, the Commentaries upon the Books of Kings, upon the 7 Psalms, and upon the Canticles, yet the Author of the last Edition brings very strong reasons to prove that they are none of this Father's. 1. Having caused every where search to be made for the Manuscripts of St. Gregory's Works, he found not any where these Commentaries were to be met with (except the Commentary upon the Canticles, whereof some Manuscripts were found) either joyn'd with the Works of St. Gregory, or apart by themselves. The Commentary upon the Canticles was printed at Paris in 1498, by Romboldus: The Exposition of the seven Penitential Psalms, was also printed by the same Person in 1512, and the Commentary upon the Canticles was publish'd at Venice in 1537. But it is not known from what Manuscript these Works were printed, and there has never been any one since who has said that he saw it. 2. St. Gregory mentions in his Letters all his other Works, but he says nothing of these. 3. These Commentaries have been unknown to all those who have seen the Works of St. Gregory. Paterius a Disciple of St. Gregory, who made a Collection of Testimonies out of the Works of his Master, has not quoted so much as one which can be taken out of these three Commentaries; and 'tis not credible, but there would have been many passages in them found worthy to be quoted, if he had known them. The same reflection may be made upon the Work of Taius Bishop of Saragosa, who publish'd in 650 a Collection taken out of the Works of St. Gregory. Alulfus Monk of Tournay in the Year 1090, compil'd another Work out of the Books of St. Gregory, which was more large than those we have already mentioned; 'tis found in a Manuscript in the Monastery of Longpont, and neither is there found in it any passage taken out of these Commentaries. To these Authors we may add those who have written since St. Gregory's time upon the Canticles, or the Books of Kings, as Bede, Angelonius a Monk of Luxovium, Rabanus, Rupertus, who have neither quoted, nor transcribed these Commentaries, altho' it be the Custom of these Authors to quote or transcribe the Writings of the Fathers. Among others, Rabanus observes in the Preface to his Commentary upon the Books of Kings, that he often transcribes passages out of St. Austine and St. Gregory. And indeed he recites many passages taken out of the Works of this Father; but he has not transcribed any thing out of the Commentaries upon the Books of Kings; and yet it was a Work which he might easily have transcribed, and out of which he should have taken many passages. Lastly, the Authors who have given us a Catalogue of the Works of St. Gregory, have said nothing of these three Commentaries. Isidore of Sevil speaks of his Pastoral, of his Morals upon Job, of his Epistles, and at the same time notes, that he had written other Discourses of Morality, Homilies upon all the Four Gospels; that this Work was unknown to him: But he says nothing of these Commentaries. Ildefonsus of Toledo mentions all the other Works of St. Gregory, and says nothing of the Commentary upon the Books of Kings, nor the Exposition upon the 7 Psalms. He speaks of a Work upon the Canticles, but it is thought that it was different from that of which we have spoken. Sigebert of Gemblours believes that there were no other Works of St. Gregory, but his Morals, his Homilies upon Ezekiel, forty Homilies upon the Gospels, his Pastoral, his Dialogues, and the Register of his Letters. As to the other Works, he says, that the Romans had burnt them; which Trithemius also affirms of the Commentary of St. Gregory upon the Books of Kings. 'Tis true, St. Gregory informs us himself, B. 10. Ep. 22, that he had made Discourses upon the Proverbs, upon the Canticles, upon the Prophets, upon the Books of Kings, and upon the Heptateuch, which the Abbot Claudius had taken in writing as well as he could; that St. Gregory, who had not health enough to write them himself, might enlarge upon these Memoirs when he should have health and leisure; but St. Gregory having read them, and finding that in many places he had not apprehended his Sense, caus'd to bring to him all that he had written. The Author of the last Edition of St. Gregory affirms, that these Discourses of St. Gregory's, collected by the Abbot Claudius, were different from these

[* But this being only a Purgation of light and venial Sins, is not such a Purgatory as is asserted by the Council of Trent, Sess. 6. Can. 30. which is the temporal pain of mortal Sins, whose eternal punishment is remitted. And in other places of his Work, Pope Gregory does expresly deny any change of state after this life, as particularly his Morals on Job. l. 8. c. 8. Ed. Bas. where he says, That at the time of Death either the good or evil Spirit seizeth upon the Soul, and keeps it with it for ever without any change; and therefore if he be consistent with himself, the Purgation which he speaks of Dial. 4. c. 39. must be consistent with the state of Joy, especially since he adds in that same Chapter, Persons shall be at the day of Judgment, as they were when they went out of this World.]

[* In this also Pope Gregory contradicts the Council of Trent, which declares, Sess. 22. c. 2, That this Sacrifice is offer'd not only for the Sins of the living, —— but also those who are dead in Christ, not yet fully purged from their Sins. But Pope Gregory supposes those to be in a state of bliss for whom the Oblation was made at the Altar, as appears by the Sacramentary IV. Kalend Julii, where the Oblation is first mention'd, and after follows O God, who has bestowed the reward of eternal happiness upon the Soul of thy Servant Leo; for such a Soul being in a state of eternal bliss, was certainly fully purg'd from its Sins, tho' the Sacrifice was offer'd for it at the Altar.] S. Gregory.

Commentaries. But I ſee no reaſon why we may not ſay that the Commentaries upon the Books of Kings and the Canticles, are a remnant of this Abbot's Collection. For the Reaſons which he brings, prove indeed that St. Gregory did not dictate and compoſe them in the form wherein they now are, but they do not prove that they are not a part of the Collection of the Abbot Claudius, who did not tye himſelf up to St. Gregory's manner of Writing, but compoſed this Work ſuo ſenſu & ſtilo, and who alſo many times did not take the Senſe of this Father: For this being ſuppos'd, 'tis eaſie to conceive that this Abbot might collect only a part of the Diſcourſes of St. Gregory upon the Books of Kings, that he wrote them by way of Commentary, whereas they were in the form of Homilies; that he only us'd the Vulgar Verſion of the Scripture, tho' St. Gregory us'd St. Jerome's. It was alſo neceſſary that the Style of theſe Commentaries ſhould be different in ſome things from St. Gregory's, tho' 'tis often very like it. And laſtly, we muſt not wonder that the Author ſometimes addreſſes the Diſcourſe to Monks, ſince he being an Abbot, and having made this Collection for his Monks, might apply to them what St. Gregory had ſaid to the Chriſtians in general. And therefore tho' St. Gregory did not compoſe theſe two Commentaries, it may be ſaid that they are in ſome ſort his Works, ſince they were made upon what he was heard to ſay.

We cannot ſay the ſame of the Expoſition of the ſeven Penitential Pſalms, which cannot be a Work of St. Gregory's time; for the Author of this Commentary ſpeaks there in three places, in Pſal. 5. v. 9. v. 26. and in Pſal. 27. againſt an Emperor of his Time, whom he accuſes of reviving Simony in the Church, of troubling it with a dangerous Schiſm, of endeavouring to enſlave it, of invading what belonged to it, of making himſelf Lord over the Church of Rome, and attempting to employ his Power againſt it. It appears plainly that this can have no relation to Mauritius, nor to Phocas, to whom St. Gregory ſpeaks after a very different manner; but that it agrees to the Controverſy between the Emperor Henry the fourth, and Gregory the ſeventh, about Inveſtitures, and to the Character of that Pope. This is therefore, either his Work, or the Work of one of his Abetters. The Style ſufficiently diſcovers that 'tis neither St. Gregory's the firſt, nor any of his Diſciples.

It cannot be affirm'd that the Antiphonarium and the Sacramentarium of St. Gregory are ſuch now as they were in his time. John the Deacon, who liv'd 300 years after him, is the firſt who ſpeaks of his Antiphonarium in B. 2. of his Life, Chap. 6. and he ſays, that a Manuſcript of it was preſerved at Rome in the Palace of the Lateran: But there is no proof that this Copy was very ancient, nor that the Antiphonarium which we now have, was perfectly like it; however it be, this Work is of no great importance. The Sacramentary, or the Book of the Office of the Maſs, would be more uſeful, if it were evident that we have it now the ſame which it was in the time of St. Gregory. But on the contrary, 'tis certain that we have it not in its purity, and that many things are added to it; for it is now a long time ſince three Authors were plac'd before it, to diſtinguiſh what was St. Gregory's and what was added. The Abbot Grimboldus, the Prieſt Rodradus and Monk of Tours, who lived about the Year 849, and Albinus or Alcuinus took this care in the Editions which they made of the Sacramentary. But they do not agree among themſelves about what is added to it, which ſhews that they have no certain proof of it, but that they make this diſtinction only by conjecture. In 1597. Rocca the Pope's Sacriſtane, publiſh'd it from a Manuſcript at Rome very different from that of Grimboldus which was publiſh'd by Pamelius. And ſince that Father, Menardus has caus'd one to be printed more large than the former, reviewed by many Manuſcripts, and chiefly by an ancient Manuſcript which is thought to have been the Miſſal of St. Eloia, altho' it contains the Feaſts of St. Prix and Leo the Second, who liv'd ſince the death of this Biſhop. This great variety ſufficiently diſcovers that we have not the Sacramentary of St. Gregory, the very ſame which he compos'd. The ſame Judgment is to be given of the Benedictionaries, which are as different as the Copies of them.

I ſhall not ſtay to refute a fabulous Story related by St. John Damaſcene, which is famous among the Greeks; that St. Gregory going into a publick place, and ſeeing a Statue of Trajan who was leaping off his Horſe to hearken to a Widow, was ſo moved with the goodneſs of this Action, that he pray'd to God for the repoſe of his Soul, and obtain'd his Salvation. This Fable, which had deceived the People and the Devoto's for a long time, is now become the Object of Laughter and Contempt to all thoſe who have the leaſt Diſcretion. The Fact of Trajan, upon which it is founded, is not related by any of thoſe who wrote the Roman Hiſtory. In the time of St. Gregory the ancient Statues were not erected in the publick places of Rome, as formerly, and St. Gregory was too much perſuaded that damned Infidels had no hopes of Salvation, to be ſo daring as to ask of God a thing ſo contrary to his unalterable Laws: And therefore which way ſoever this Invention of the Modern Greeks be conſider'd, 'tis equally indefenſible. From whence it follows alſo, that we ought to reject a Relation attributed to two Deacons of Rome, taken from a Manuſcript of the Vatican Library, and printed at the end of St. Gregory's Letters, wherein 'tis ſuppos'd, that the Story of the Deliverance of Trajan's Soul is true, and that St. Gregory was afflicted with continual ſickneſs, during his Pontificate, for making this extraordinary Petition.

S. Gregory.

What we have ſaid of the Works of St. Gregory, ſufficiently diſcovers that he had a Genius very proper for Morality, and that what he compos'd was an inexhauſtible Fountain of Spiritual and Moral Thoughts: He expreſſes them after a very noble manner, and commonly includes them rather in grave Periods than witty Sentences. His Words are not very choice, neither is his Compoſure much laboured, but it is eaſy, coherent, and always uniform: He has nothing very ſublime and lively, but what he ſays is true and ſolid. It is full of Common Places, and great Maxims: He is copious, and ſometimes too long in the Explications of Morality, and too ſubtile in his Allegories.

The Collection of his Works has been printed many times, at Lyons in 1516, 1539, 1540. at Paris by John Petit and Remboldus, in 1518. by Chevallon in 1523. at Roan in 1521 by Regnaldus; at Paris by Guillartus in 1532. at Baſill by Frobenius in 1564. at Antwerp by Plantin in 1572. at Venice in 1583. at Paris by Nivelle in 1571, and in 1586. Theſe Editions were follow'd by that of Rome in ſix Tomes, which was begun in 1588, and finiſh'd in 1593. From theſe was made the Edition at Rome in Octavo, 1613. and thoſe of Paris in the Years 1605, and 1640.

The laſt Edition of the Works of St. Gregory was publiſh'd at Paris in 1675. It appear'd under the Name of Mr. Goſſainville a Prieſt, but 'tis known that Dr. Julian took a great deal of Pains in it. They had a great number of Manuſcripts by which they might review all the Works. They diſtributed them into three Tomes. The firſt contains the Morals, the Paſtoral, the Homilies upon Ezekiel and upon the Goſpels, together with the Lives of St. Gregory, written by Paul and John the Deacons, and the Teſtimonials of the Ancients. The ſecond Tome contains the Dialogues, the Letters accompanied with long and learned Notes, the Antiphonary, Sacramentary, and the Benedictionary. The third Tome contains the Commentaries upon the Kings, the ſeven Pſalms, and the Canticles, attributed to St. Gregory, together with the Commentaries of Paterius upon the Holy Scripture, taken out of the Works of St. Gregory. The Prefaces which are prefixed at the beginning of each Work, are ſhort, uſeful, and well-written. The whole Edition is dedicated to my Lord Louis de Baſſompiere then Biſhop of Santones; a Prelate who perfectly imitated the Virtues of St. Gregory, who practis'd exactly according to the Rules which this great Pope preſcribed to Paſtors, and who had all the Qualifications which he requires in Biſhops. For after he had paſs'd his firſt years in Retirement, and led that part of his Life free from Crimes, wherein the greater part of young People are engag'd in worldly Pleaſures; he was nam'd when he thought little of it, to the Biſhoprick of Santones. His deſign was to refuſe it, but being as it were forc'd to accept of it, he thought of nothing more than to diſcharge his Office: For accompliſhing this Deſign, he abandon'd the Court and Secular Affairs, to retire into his Dioceſs, that he might apply himſelf wholly to the Government of that Flock which Providence had entruſted to him. Afterwards he had favourable opportunities of encreaſing his Fortune in the World, and of advancement to Churches, more beneficial and conſiderable, but he ſhun'd them with the ſame Precipitation that others run after them. He was obſerv'd to fly away quickly, at a time when the Affairs of his Dioceſs oblig'd him to ſtay at Paris, becauſe a Report went about, that ſome had caſt an Eye upon him to give him a Place which would engage him to live at a greater diſtance from his Church, or to accept of another. 'Tis very well known with what Prudence he govern'd his People in the moſt difficult times, with what Diſcretion he continued in his duty of Loyalty to his Prince, with what Meekneſs he reclaim'd a great number of Hereticks to the Church, with whom his Dioceſs was fill'd when he entred into it. All the World did equally experience his Goodneſs, his Moderation and Eaſineſs. Great Perſons had always occaſion to praiſe him for his Civility, and Inferior Perſons for his Charity. He diſtributed his Goods to the Poor with ſo much Liberality, that oftentimes he reſerved nothing to himſelf. He gave conſiderable Alms to poor Gentlemen, and to Families that were in want, without letting them know to whom they were oblig'd for the Relief. He did ſo induſtriouſly conceal the Good that he did, that thoſe who were neareſt to him could hardly perceive it; and if it happen'd that they did diſcover it, he ſtrictly charg'd them to tell no body. Sometimes he would feign by a pious fraud, that the Alms which he gave was a Debt, that thoſe who receiv'd it might not be aſham'd to take it. He never heard any ſpeak of a Quarrel, Difference, or Suit, againſt any Perſon in his Dioceſs, but he us'd his utmoſt endeavours to accommodate it; and as he was of a ſweet and obliging Diſpoſition, and had a briſk and a ſharp Wit, he did almoſt always ſucceed ceed in them to the Content of all Parties. He lov'd Order and Diſcipline, yet was never ſevere or moroſe. He treated his Prieſts as his Brethren, and hated an imperious and domeniering Spirit. He vigorouſly maintain'd the Dignity of Biſhops, and could not endure to ſee it any ways diminiſh'd. He defended the Truth, and the Rights of Epiſcopacy ſtoutly, but humbly. He would never engage himſelf into any Party in the Diſputes which were managed with ſo much heat in his Life-time among Divines, and behav'd himſelf with ſo much Prudence, that both Parties were ſatisfy'd with his Conduct. Laſtly, at his death, he gave ſigns of a great Abſtraction from the World, and left the Poor his only Heirs. There remains now an illuſtrious Monument of this great Prelate: 'Tis a Treatiſe written in the form of a Dialogue, about cutting off ſome Feſtivals, printed by his own Order in 1670. He lays down there Principles ſo ſolid, and diſcovers ſo great ſtrength of Reaſon and Learning, that I doubt not but all thoſe who read it, will have as great an Idea of his Learning, as thoſe that knew him had of his Holineſs. I know that this Digreſſion is a little remote from my Subject; but I hope the Reader will eaſily pardon me, that I have taken this occaſion to do Juſtice to the Memory of a Prelate who deſerves to be famous to future Generations.

PATERIUS.

Paterius.

PAterius a Diſciple of St. Gregory and Notary of the Church of Rome, made a Collection of Teſtimonies out of St. Gregory, wherein he explains paſſages of Scripture, and ranks them according to the Order of the Holy Books: He compos'd three Books of Explications, two upon the Books of the Old Teſtament, and the third upon thoſe of the New. This Collection was ſubjoyn'd to the Works of St. Gregory in the Roman Edition of them, and in thoſe which follow'd after it: But it was compos'd only of two Books, viz. of the firſt, which is upon the Books of the Old Teſtament as far as the Canticles, and of the third upon the Books of the New Teſtament. That which ſhould be the ſecond is not in theſe Editions nor in the greateſt part of the Manuſcripts. But Father Oudinus aſſures us that he ſaw it in a Manuſcript of the Library of the Celeſtines. This Work being only an Extract out of the Books of St. Gregory, 'tis not neceſſary to ſay any thing more of it.

St. LEANDER Biſhop of Sevil.

S. Leander Biſhop of Sevil.

ST. Leander, Son of Severianus of the Province of Carthage in Spain, after he had profeſs'd a Monaſtical Life, was promoted to the Biſhoprick of Sevil. He had ſo much Eloquence, ſo much Addreſs, and Wit and Learning, that he brought back into the boſom of the Church the Goths who were engag'd in the Arian Faction. He was ſent to Conſtantinople in the quality of Ambaſſador from his King to the Emperor, Tiberius, where he contracted as we have already ſaid, a friendſhip with St. Gregory. He compos'd many Works, of which here follows the Catalogue which Iſidore has left us. He wrote, ſays he, in the time of his Journey two Books againſt Heretical Doctrines, wherein there appear'd great knowledge of the Scripture. There he diſcovers and confounds with great earneſtneſs the Errors of the Arians, by ſhewing what the Church teaches in oppoſition to them, and wherein it differs from them in its Doctrine and in its Myſteries. He wrote alſo another little Work againſt the Arians, wherein he relates their Objections, and ſubjoyns Anſwers to them. He compos'd alſo a Treatiſe addreſs'd to his Siſter Florentina, concerning the Inſtruction of Virgins and Contempt of the World. He was very induſtrious and careful about the Offices of the Church, for he made two Editions of the Pſalms with the Prayers, and compos'd Songs ſuitable to the Prayers and the Pſalms which are repeated at the Sacrifice. He addreſs'd many Letters to Pope Gregory. There is one about Baptiſm, another addreſs'd to his Brother, wherein he admoniſhes him, that he muſt not fear death; and many Familiar Letters to his Friends, which are not written in lofty Words, but are made up of ſpiritual Thoughts. He flouriſh'd and died under King Reccaredus. This is what Iſidore informs us concerning the Life and Works of St. Leander.

S. Leander Biſhop of Sevil.

We have now nothing remaining but this Letter to his Siſter Florentina, which is the third part of the Code of the Rules of Benedict of Aniana: 'Tis a very wiſe and uſeful Rule for Nuns. The Style of it is conciſe and ſhort; he affects to ſpeak by way of Sentences, which are adorn'd with Antitheſes, and Words, whoſe termination and cadence are the ſame at every part of a Period. There is alſo a Harangue of this Saint, about the Converſion of the Goths, which he ſpoke after the third Council of Toledo, at the end of which it is to be found.

LICINIANUS and SEVERUS Biſhop of Spain.

Licinianus and Severus Biſhops of Spain.

THeſe are two Biſhops of Spain mentioned by Iſidore in theſe following Words: Licinianus Biſhop of Carthage in Spain was learned in the Holy Scripture. We have read ſome of his Letters; whereof there is one about the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and many written to Eutropius Biſhop of Valentia; but the other Fruits of his Labour and Induſtry are not come to our Hands. He flouriſh'd in the time of the Emperor Mauritius; and died at Conſtantinople, being poiſon'd by his Enemies.

Severus Biſhop of Malaga, a Friend and Colleague of Licinianus, wrote a little Treatiſe againſt Vincentius Biſhop of Saragoſa, who had deſerted the Catholick Faith, and was fall'n into the Error of the Arians. He wrote alſo a Letter of Virginity to his Siſter, intituled, The Ring. We know nothing but the Title of it, therefore cannot tell how it is written. He flouriſh'd and died under the ſame Emperor.

Licinianus and Severus Biſhops of Spain.

DINAMIUS.

Dinamius.

SIgibert of Gemblours places Dinamius among Eccleſiaſtical Writers, to whom he gives the Title of Illuſtrious and Noble; and he ſays, that he wrote the Life of St. Marius, Abbot of a Monaſtery in the Valley of the Vaudois. We have an Abridgment of the Life of this Abbot in the firſt Benedictine Age of Mr. Mabillon, p. 105. and there is alſo the Life of Maximus Abbot of Lerina, which is related by Surius, and attributed to Dinamius. St. Gregory has written two Letters, 33. Ind. 11. 33. Ind. 15. to Dinamius a Nobleman in Gaul, and Governor of Marſeilles. We learn alſo from St. Gregory, that he joyn'd his Houſe to a Monaſtery, in honour of St. Caſſianus, B. 6. Ep. 13. Ind. 15. This Dinamius died in 601, as appears by Letter 70 of B. 9. of St. Gregory written to his Brother Aurelius to comfort him upon his death. Therefore Dinamius, who under Childebert the ſecond, plac'd two Biſhops againſt the King's Will, one at Uretia, and the other at Marſeilles, as is reported in Gregory of Tours, B. 6. Hiſt. c. 7. was different from this Dinamius. Whether of the two is the Author of theſe Lives, if the ſame Perſon be the Author of them both, or if one is the Author of the Life of Marius, and the other of that of Maximus, is very difficult to divine.

Dinamius.

EUTROPIUS.

Eutropius.

EUtropius Biſhop of Valentia in Spain, while he was yet an Abbot of a Monaſtery, wrote a very uſeful Letter to the Biſhop Licinianus, of whom we have ſpoken, wherein he enquires of him, why the Unction of Chriſm is given to Infants who are baptized. He wrote alſo a Letter to Peter Biſhop of Iturbica, concerning the Diſtinction of Monks, which contains wholeſome Advices, and very uſeful for them. Theſe are the Words of St. Iſidore in his Book of Illuſtrious Men, Chap. 32. The laſt of theſe two Letters was publiſh'd by Holſtenius, in the Addition to the Code of the Rules of Benedict of Aniana. It is not intituled, De Diſtinctione Monachorum, as is noted in the Text of Iſidore, which probably is corrupted, but De Diſtrictione Monachorum & ruina Monaſteriorum. There he ſhews that the Monks muſt be reprov'd with candor, and obliged to obſerve their Rule with exactneſs and rigor. This Letter is written in a very plain Style.

Eutropius.

MAXIMUS Biſhop of Saragoſa.

Maximus.

THis Biſhop was preſent at the Council of Barcelona in 590, of Toledo in 610, and of Egara in 614. St. Iſidore ſays, that he compos'd many Works in Proſe and Verſe; that he wrote a ſhort Hiſtory of the Tranſactions in Spain in the time of the Goths, and that he wrote many other things which Iſidore had never ſeen.

Maximus.

EUSTRATIUS Prieſt of Conſtantinople.

Euſtratius.

WE ſhall conclude this Age with ſome Greek Authors, mention'd by Photius, who may be thought to have liv'd at the ſame time, although Photius does not diſtinctly ſet it down.

The firſt is Euſtratius, a Prieſt of the Church of Conſtantinople, who wrote a Treatiſe of the Souls of the Dead, of which Photius gives the following Judgment, in Code 171. of his Bibliotheque.

His Style, ſays he, is not much to be valued, but his Thoughts are not altogether to be blam'd: He is clear in what he ſays. He propoſes to himſelf three things. Firſt to prove that Souls are Active after their ſeparation from the Body, not only the Souls of the Bleſſed, but generally of all Men, and that they act differently, according to the difference of their Merits: That thoſe who appear in different Forms diſcover themſelves in their Nature, and that 'tis not only the Divine Power which makes them appear in viſible ſhapes, ſince 'tis not neceſſary to have recourſe to the Figures and Repreſentations which are fram'd by this Power, for the Souls alone can by themſelves do what pleaſes God. After he has endeavour'd to prove theſe two Points by paſſages of Holy Scripture and the Fathers, he labours to ſhew that the Sacrifices and Oblations which the Prieſts make for thoſe who die in the Faith of the Church, as well as the Prayers and Alms which are made for them, are profitable to the Salvation and Pardon of their Sins, for whom they are offer'd: That the Cuſtom is to offer them at the end of three days after Death, in memory of the Reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt, at the end of nine Days, becauſe Jeſus Chriſt diſcover'd himſelf to his Diſciples on the ninth Day after his Reſurrection; and laſtly, at the end of forty Days, becauſe after this number of Days Jeſus Chriſt aſcended into Heaven. This Work was publiſh'd by Allatius in his Treatiſe of Purgatory.

Euſtratius.

ANDRONICIANUS.

Andronicianus.

I Have read, ſays Photius, in Code 45, two Books of Andronicianus againſt the Eunomians. He promiſes very much in his Prefaces, but he does not perform what he promiſes, particularly in the ſecond Book. He had the Civility, the Wit, and Way of Writing of a Philoſopher, and was a Chriſtian by Religion. There is no Work of his now remaining.

Andronicianus.

LUCIUS CHARINUS.

Lucius Charinus.

THis Author wrote a Book, intituled, The Travels of the Apoſtles, containing the Actions of St. Peter, St. John, St. Andrew, St. Thomas, and St. Paul, whoſe Style and Relation do equally deſerve contempt, in the Judgment of Photius, Code 144. His Style was unequal, his Words vulgar, and his Diſcourſes very remote from the native candor and ſimplicity of Apoſtolical Relations. He was full of Stories ſtuff'd with folly and impiety. He feigns that the God of the Jews was a God of wickedneſs, to whom Simon the Magician was a Miniſter; that on the contrary, Chriſt is a God of Goodneſs. He gives him ſometimes the Title of Father, ſometimes that of Son. He imagines that he was not truly made Man, but only in appearance. He ſays that he appeared to his Diſciples under differant ſhapes, ſometimes as an old Man, ſometimes as as a young Man, ſometimes as an Infant, ſometimes great and ſometimes little, ſometimes as high as Heaven, and ſometimes creeping upon the Earth. He vents many Fooleries concerning the Croſs, and affirms that another was crucified for Jeſus Chriſt. He condemns Marriage, and looks upon Generation as the Work of the Devil. He reckons up ſeveral Reſurrections of Men, of Oxen, &c. He ſeems to blame the uſe of Images, as he did the Iconoclaſts. In a Word, ſays Photius, the whole Book contains nothing but things childiſh and prodigious, Malicious, Fables, Falſities, Follies, Contradictions and Impieties, inſomuch that one may ſay, without deviating from the Truth, that this Book is the origine and ſource of all reſies. He ſhould have rather call'd it a Collection of the Follies and Impieties of the Ancient Hereticks.

Lucius Charinus.

METRODORUS

Metrodorus

THis Author had made a Cycle for the Celebration of the Feaſt of Eaſter, conſiſting of eight and twenty Cycles, nineteen Years apiece, beginning at Diocleſian, and continuing it for the ſpace of five hundred thirty three years, to mark the Feaſts of Eaſter according to the Calculation of the fourteenth Moon, altho' neither the Ancient Church, nor the Modern, ſays Photius, did always ſo exactly determine it. He did not know who this Author was, and when he wrote.

Metrodorus

HERACLIANUS Biſhop of Chalcedon.

Heraclianus.

THis Author compos'd twenty Books againſt the Manicheans. His Style was conciſe, free from uſeleſs words, ſublime, and of a neatneſs ſupported by the Majeſty of the Expreſſions, becauſe he mixt the Attick Dialect with ordinary Diſcourſe. He overthrows the Book which the Manichees call their Goſpel, the Treatiſe of Gyants, and their Treaſure. He mentions thoſe who had written againſt theſe Hereticks before him, viz. Egemonius, who had written the Diſpute of Archelaus againſt Manes; Titus, who thinking to refute Manichens, had written againſt Addas; George of Laodicea, who had us'd the ſame Arguments with Titus; Serapion Biſhop of Thmuis, and Diodorus of Tarſus, who had oppoſed the Manicheans in a Work of five and twenty Books, in the ſeven firſt whereof he thought to attack their Goſpel, altho' he refuted the Book of Addas, to which they gave the Title of Meaſures. Heraclianus confirm'd in a few Words what ſeem'd to him moſt weak in the Works of theſe Authors, ſupplyed what appear'd to him forgotten, and repeated the beſt things they had ſaid, adding to them what came into his own mind. This Author was nervous in his Reaſons which he improv'd by the help of other Sciences. He overthrew the Fables of the Manicheans, and refuted ſolidly their Errors. This Work was addreſs'd to a Chriſtian call'd Aebillius by whom he he was deſir'd to refute in publick Writings the Hereſie of the Manicheans which ſpread in the World. Photius has noted the Emperor under whom this Author liv'd, but he is not to be found among thoſe that are printed. His Work is loſt; we have taken what we have ſaid out of Photius in Code 85.

Heraclianus.

LEONTIUS Biſhop of Arabiſſa.

Leontius.

PHotius relates in Code 172 a part of this Author's Homily, which was intituled, Of the Creation and of Lazarus. The Fall of Adam, and his Puniſhment, are there deſcribed, to ſhew the neceſſity of the Incarnation; and the Reſurrection of Lazarus is there compar'd to the Joy which John felt in his Mother's Womb.

Councils.

THE Canons and Acts of the Councils, ought to be reckoned amongſt the Works of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, ſince they are the Works of ſeveral Perſons aſſembled in the ſame Place, to deliberate upon the Affairs of the Church, that concern either the Faith, or the Diſcipline, or the Manners of Chriſtians. Theſe Kinds of Aſſemblies were uſed in the Firſt Ages of the Church; and the Apoſtles were the firſt Authors of them. For the Chriſtians of the Primitive Church, having had ſome Diſputes, Whether they were Obliged to Circumciſe and Follow the Law of Moſes; The Apoſtles and Prieſts convened at Jeruſalem, to Examine and Reſolve upon this Matter, and at laſt concluded, That it was not neceſſary to impoſe theſe Burdens upon Chriſtians; but only enjoined them to abſtain from Meats offered to Idols, from Blood, and from things Strangled, and from Fornication. (a) This was the Firſt, and Only Council, to ſpeak properly, that was held by the Apoſtles themſelves.

After their Example, when any Difference aroſe in the Church, or when it was neceſſary to make any Regulations; the Biſhops, and oftentimes the Prieſts themſelves met together, to decide the controverted Queſtions, and appoint Laws for the better Government and Diſcipline of the Church. 'Tis true indeed, that in the Three Firſt Ages of the Church, Theſe Aſſemblies were more rare, and leſs remarkable, than they were in the following Centuries; as well becauſe the continual Perſecutions of the Emperors hindered the Biſhops from meeting freely and in Publick; as alſo becauſe the Tradition of the Apoſtles being as yet freſh in Mens Memories, it was not ſuppoſed neceſſary to Summon a Council for the Eſtabliſhing of every Truth, and Condemnation of every Error. Hence it is, that we don't find (b) in any credible Authors, that any Councils were held to condemn the firſt Hereticks, ſuch as were the Simonians, the Carpocratians, the Baſilidians, the Gnoſticks, &c. The Errors of theſe Hereticks were looked upon with horror by all the Chriſtians, who conſidered the Authors of them; and likewiſe thoſe that maintained them, as Perſons already excommunicated, and ſeparated from the Church, without the Solemnity and Trouble of Convening a Synod to excommunicate them by Name. In ſhort, every Biſhop inſtructed his own People in the True Faith of the Church, and confuted all Sorts of Errors by the Authority of Scripture, and Tradition.

Councils.

The firſt Councils, that are mentioned in Antiquity, are thoſe that were held under the Pontificate of Pope Victor, to adjuſt the celebrated Controverſie about keeping Eaſter; and ſome others that were aſſembled almoſt at the ſame Time to ſuppreſs the growing Faction of the Montaniſts. Euſebius mentions the laſt in the fifth Book of his Hiſtory, Chap. 15. and Tertullian aſſures us, that in his Time the Montaniſts alſo met together (c) for themſelves. As for what relates to the Synods that were convened upon the Diſpute concerning the Celebration of Eaſter, though the Number of them is uſually reckoned to be great; yet Euſebius mentions but three; one of which was held in Palæſtine, another in Aſia, and a third at Rome. And then, as for what concerns the Churches of France, of Pontus, of Corinth, and of the Eaſt, he barely tells us, That the reſpective Biſhops there, wrote to Pope Victor about this Matter, without ſpeaking of any Council aſſembled in theſe Places.

Agrippinus, towards the Beginning of the third Century, held a Council in Africk; where it was ordained that Hereticks ſhould be re-baptized.

There were likewiſe two Councils held in Arabia, under the Emperor Gordianus; one againſt Berillus Biſhop of Boſtra, who maintain'd, That Jeſus Chriſt was not a different Perſon from the Father, before he made himſelf Man; and the other againſt the Arabians, who affirmed, That the Souls of Men were mortal.

We don't know at what Time the Councils of Iconium and Synnada were aſſembled, that decreed, It was neceſſary to re-baptize Hereticks.

I ſhall ſay nothing more of the Conncils held in Africk, and at Rome in St. Cyprian's Time; becauſe I diſcourſed largely about them, when I had Occaſion to conſider the Writings and Life of that Father.

(a) And only Council of the Apoſtles.] They uſually reckon Four. The firſt concerning the Election of St. Matthias, Acts 1. The ſecond concerning the Election of Deacons, Acts 6. The third, that whereof we now ſpeak, Acts 15. The fourth, Acts 21. Where the Prieſts of Jeruſalem declare, That the converted Jews might obſerve the Law, and exhort St. Paul to make a Vow. But in ſtrictneſs of Speech, only the third of theſe Aſſemblies deſerves the Name of a Council. The two firſt were not held upon the Account of any Controverſie; nothing was there decided; the Chriſtians found themſelves aſſembled together, but were not expreſly ſummoned. In ſhort, they were Aſſemblies of all the Chriſtians, and not of the Apoſtles only. The fourth was rather a familiar Converſation, than a Synodical Deliberation; and they only give ſome Counſel and an Advertiſement to St. Paul, without deciding any Matter. And thus 'tis the third Aſſembly alone, that deſerves to be called a Council. The Council of Antioch is ſpurious, as we have elſewhere ſhown.

(b) In any credible Authors.] The Author publiſhed by Sirmondus under the Name of Prædeſtinatus, mentions ſome Councils that were held againſt the ancient Hereticks; but he is a modern Author, and does not deſerve Credit upon his own Authority.

(c) For themſelves.] Tertull. in lib. De Jejun. Aguntur præcepta per Gracias illas certis in locis Conſilia, per quæ & altiora quæque tractantur. Some Perſons underſtand this Paſſage of the Councils of the Catholicks; but he ſpeaks of thoſe held by the Montaniſts, as the following Words plainly ſhew.

Councils.

Dionyſius Biſhop of Rome ſummoned a Council, in which he eſtabliſhed the Divinity of the Word, and the Myſtery of the Trinity againſt the Errors of the Sabellians, and that which was afterwards the Error of the Arians. He wrote a Letter upon this Occaſion to Dionyſius of Alexandria. St. Athanaſius mentions this Synod.

In the Time of Pope Stephen, a Council was held at Antioch; where the Biſhops condemned the Practice of the Novatians. St. Dionyſius of Alexandria ſent Word to Sixtus, that he was invited thither: Euſebius Lib. 7. Hiſt. c. 8. St. Epiphanius in his Account of the Hereſie of the Noëtians, mentions two Synods that were aſſembled in Aſia againſt Noëtus, and gives us an Account of ſome Words of that Heretick, and of the laſt Synod.

But of all the Councils that were ſummoned in the three firſt Centuries, the moſt celebrated and famous, are the two Councils of Antioch aſſembled againſt Paulus Samoſatenus, Biſhop of that City, who maintained, That the Word was not truly united to the Humanity in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt; and who likewiſe, according to the Teſtimony of ſome Authors, denied, that the Word was a diſtinct Perſon from the Father. The firſt Council aſſembled againſt him, was held at Antioch about the Year 264. Euſebius tells us, That the principal Biſhops who aſſiſted there were, Firmilian Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, Gregory and Athenodorus Biſhops of Pontus, Helenus Biſhop of Tarſus, Nicomas Biſhop of Iconium, Himenæus of Jeruſalem, Theoteonus of Cæſaria; without mentioning an infinite Number of others as well Biſhops as Prieſts. He ſays, that St. Dionyſius of Alexandria, being invited to this Synod, could not come thither, but that he acquainted them with his Judgment concerning this Matter by way of Letter, where he diſdain'd to ſalute the Author of that Hereſie. In all appearance Firmilian preſided in this Synod; for the Biſhops of the ſecond Council ſay in their Letter, That Paul having promiſed to renounce his Opinion, Firmilian gave Credit to his Proteſtation, and hoping that this Affair might terminate calmly, without any prejudice or diſhonour done to the Church, judged it convenient to defer paſſing Judgment. And this plainly proves, that Firmilian held the chief Place in the Synod, and that they followed his Advice. Now they did not paſs Sentence againſt Paulus Samoſatenus in this Synod, becauſe he had promiſed to quit his erroneous Doctrine; but it ſeems he kept not his Word, but relapſed a little time after into his old Error; ſo a ſecond Council was held againſt him in the City of Antioch, in the Year 270, where we find ſeventy two Biſhops. Paulus Samoſatenus was here convinced of his Error by a Prieſt, whoſe Name was Malchion, and afterwards he was depoſed by the Council, and Domnus elected into his Place. The Biſhops of this Council ſoon after wrote a ſynodal Letter to Dionyſius Biſhop of Rome, and to all the other Biſhops in the World, to give an Account of their condemning Paulus, and electing Domnus in his Room. This Letter is to be ſeen in Euſebius, Lib. 7. Hiſt. Cap. 30. They there give an ample Relation of what paſs'd in the firſt Synod; in which Paulus Samoſatenus having ſolemnly promiſed to change his Opinion, Firmilian thought it convenient to defer paſſing judgment upon him; That the aforeſaid Biſhop was upon his Journey, with a Deſign to come to the Synod, but died by the Way. After this, they proceed to lay open the Manners of Paulus, and accuſe him of enriching himſelf by publick Extortion, Rapine and Sacrilege; they reproach him for his inſupportable Arrogance, and cruel Temper; they complained of him for taking upon him the State of a great Lord, as appeared by his numerous Retinue, by his ſitting in an high Tribunal, by his ill Treatment of thoſe Perſons that did not make their Court to him, and would not commend him, when they ſang Praiſes to God; by his commanding Hymns to be ſung in his own Praiſe, and ordering himſelf to be publickly commended in the Sermons; by his living too familiarly with Women, and uſing his Clergy and People after a tyrannical inſolent Manner. In ſhort, After they have accuſed him of all thoſe Vices that are ordinary and common to Biſhops of great Sees, they ſay they condemned him principally becauſe he revived the Error of Artemas; teaching, That Jeſus Chriſt was a mere Man, and that he did not exiſt before he was born of the Virgin Mary; and that having depoſed him, they choſe Domnus in his room. All which they take notice of, that for the time to come, all communicatory Letters might be addreſſed to him only.

Councils.

There is alſo another Letter attributed to this Council, addreſſed to Paulus Samoſatenus, which contains a Profeſſion of Faith. Baronius aſcribes it to the firſt Council; but it being writ a little before Paulus's Depoſition, as manifeſtly appears by the Title, and by its carrying the Name of Himenæus in the Front, who preſided in the ſecond Council, and not Firmilian, who preſided in the firſt; we ought to conclude, that it belongs to the ſecond Council. But we have a great deal of Reaſon to believe that the Letter publiſhed by Turrianus is ſuppoſititious, as well as that of St. Dionyſius of Alexandria to Paulus Samoſatenus; as we have already ſhown in another Place.

Baronius attributes beſides to this Council, a Profeſſion of Faith, ſet down in the Council of Epheſus in the third Part, and aſſigned in that place to the Council of Nice. I don't know what Reaſons Baronius had to incline him to this Opinion; but it ſeems paſt diſpute to me, that it does not belong to this Council at Antioch: for certain it is, that the word Conſubſtantial was there rejected, whereas it is to be found in this Profeſſion, as it is ſet down in the Council of Epheſus, under the Name of the Nicene Council; although it no more belongs to that, than it does to the former: But the truth is, 'Tis a Profeſſion of Faith drawn up by ſome Biſhops, to reconcile the Deciſions of thoſe two Councils, and to explain in what Senſe the word Conſubſtantial was rejected by the Firſt, and approved by the Second.

Thus I have given a Catalogue of the Councils held in the three firſt Ages of the Church, that are mentioned by Authors that deſerve Credit. I don't in the leaſt queſtion, but that there were abundance of other Aſſemblies convened in this Time: but then there is no reaſon to admit thoſe, that are only ſpoken of by modern Authors, ſuch as the Prædeſtinatus publiſhed by Sirmondus, the Author of the Synodical Book, Bede; and ſome others of the ſame Character.

Of falſe Decretals attributed to the firſt Popes.

Of Falſe Decretals, &c.

THE Falſity of the Decretals that are attributed to the firſt Popes before Syricius, is ſo well known at preſent, that it would not be neceſſary to ſpeak any Thing concerning them in this Place: If the Subject of my Book did not oblige me in a few Words to run over the principal Reaſons, which prove them to be ſuppoſititious. I begin with them that are general and common to all the Decretals, and I ſhall afterwards deſcend to thoſe that are more particular.

Of Falſe Decretals, &c.

1. (a) All theſe Decretals were unknown to all the ancient Fathers, to all the Popes, and all the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, that wrote before the ninth Century. Now what rational Man can believe, that

(a) All theſe Decretals were unknown to the Ancient Fathers.] Except that of St. Clement to St. James tranſlated by Rufinus, all the reſt were abſolutely unknown, and no Author ever cited any of them before the Ninth Age of the Church.

so vast a Number of Letters composed by so many holy Popes, that contained so many important Points in Relation to the Discipline of the Church, cou'd be unknown to Eusebius, to St. Jerome, to St. Augustine, to St. Basil, and in short, to all those Authors that have spoken of the Writings of the Popes, or have written concerning the Discipline of the Church. Could it possibly happen that the Popes to whom these Letters are so very favourable, wou'd never have cited and alledged them, to raise their Reputation? Who wou'd ever imagine that the Decisions of these Decretals should be never so much as quoted in any Council, or in any Canon? He that will seriously consider with himself, that since these Decretals have been imposed upon the World, they have been cited in an infinite number of places by Popes, by Councils, and often copied by the Canonists, will be easily persuaded, that they wou'd have gain'd a mighty Reputation, and been quoted very often by Antiquity, if they had been Genuine and True. (b) The first Man that published them, if we may believe Hincmarus, was one Riculphus Bishop of Mentz, who died about the Beginning of the ninth Century. 'Tis commonly believed, that he brought them from Spain, since the Collection carries the Name of Isidorus; but 'tis certain, (c) it could never be composed by Isidore the Great, Archbishop of Sevil; and there is great Reason to believe, (d) that it was no Spaniard, but rather some German or Frenchman that begun this Imposture. It likewise (e) seems probable, that some of these Decretals have been foisted in since Riculphus's time, and it is no less credible, that Benedict a Deacon of the Church of Mentz, who made a Collection of Canons by the Order of Autgarius Bishop of Mentz, and Successor of Riculphus, put the last Hand to this Collection of false Decretals, attributed to one Isidorus, (f) surnamed the Merchant or Sinner, who is a different Person from the famous Bishop of Sevil. (g) We read in History, that about this Time, a certain Man named Isidore, the Brother of Eulogius, came from Spain along with some Merchants, and withdrew himself to Mentz. Now 'tis very probable, that this Man's Name was set to the Collection of Decretals, and likewise occasion'd the Belief, that they were brought from Spain.

Secondly, The Imposture of these Letters is invincibly proved from hence, because they are made up of a Contexture of Passages of Fathers, of Councils, of Letters of Popes, of Canons, and Ordinances of Emperors, which have appeared from the third Age of the Church down to the midst of the ninth: (h) It is visible, that all these Passages drawn out of several Places have been woven together by some Impostor, that had not a Genius large enough to compose the Letters himself.

Of False Decretals, &c.

Thirdly, The Scripture cited in all these Letters follows the vulgar Translation of St. Jerome, which demonstrates that they are since his Time, and consequently don't belong to the Popes whose Names they carry, that lived long before.

Fourthly, The Matter of these Letters is not at all agreeable to the Age, when the Popes to whom they are attributed, lived: There is no Mention made in any of them, either of Persecutions, or Martyrs, or of the Doctrine of the Church in opposition to the first Hereticks, or of the Duty of Bishops, or of the Care that ought to be taken of the Flock of Jesus Christ: But they speak of the Questions of Doctrine against the Arians, and the Eutychians, and of several Matters of Discipline, which suppose that the Church had been long established.

Fifthly, These Letters are full of Anachronisms; the Consulships and Names of Consuls are ill placed, and out of Order; nay, more, the true Years of the Popes don't agree oftentimes with the Account that is to be found in these Letters.

Sixthly, The Style of these Letters is extremely barbarous, they are full of Solecisms, and we frequently meet with some Words in them, that were only used in the lower Ages. It is worth a Man's while to observe, that all these Letters are of the same Style; now I desire to know how it cou'd possibly happen, that so many different Popes living in different Ages, should all write the same Style? This sets it beyond dispute, that all these Letters were composed almost in the same Time, and by the same Person; or at least by one that pursued the same Train of Thoughts.

Now since these Letters first appeared in an unlearned dark Age, what Wonder is it if they were received with little Contestation? And yet Hincmar Archbishop of Rheims with the (i) French Bishops, even at that time made great difficulty of acknowledging them. But in a short time after they acquired some Authority, being supported by the Court of Rome, whose Pretensions they mightily favoured.

After having thus represented the Reasons that prove in general, that all the Decretal Epistles of the Popes before Syricius are Spurious; I shall now descend to particulars, and endeavour to shew in few Words, that every Epistle carries undeniable Signs of its being an Imposture, along with it.

The First, and that which seems to bear the greatest Authority, is the Epistle of St. Clement to St. James, the Brother of our Lord; the first Part

(b) The first that Published them, if we may believe Hincmar, was one Riculphus.] 'Tis in the twenty fourth Chapter of his Book against Hincmar of Laon, where it is said, that Riculphus brought the Book of Epistles, as it was collected by Isidore, out of Spain, and dispersed them in that Country. Benedict the Deacon tells us in the Preface before his Collection, that he drew these Decretals out of the Archives of the Church of Mentz, from whence Riculphus had formerly taken them, and where they were found by Autgarius his Successor.

(c) Not by Isidore Archbishop of Sevil.] He died in 636. and the Author of these Decretals has taken some Passages out of the Council of Toledo, held in the Year 675. as also out of the 6*th* Council celebrated A. D. 681. and out of Gregory the Second, and Gregory the Third, Boniface of Mentz, and several others who lived after Isidore of Sevil.

(d) There is reason to believe, that it was no Spaniard, but rather some German or Frenchman.] 'Tis exactly the Style of the French or Germans about the Ninth Age. The greatest part of these spurious Letters are directed to Germans or French. The Author of them cites a Letter of an Abbess of France, to Boniface of Mentz, and another of the same Bishop. Besides, This Collection was first seen in France, being discovered at Mentz.

(e) Some of these Decretals have been forged since Riculphus.] He died in 814. and there are some Letters amongst them, where we find some Fragments out of the Council of Paris held in 829. Benedict was the first that exposed these Letters to the World; and he tells us, they had been found by Autgarius in the Archives of the Church of Mentz, where Riculphus placed them, having before brought them out of Spain. All this perhaps is only his own Invention.

(f) Surnamed the Merchant or Sinner.] Both these Titles are to be found in the Preface. Isidorus Peccator, sive Mercator, servus Jesu Christi.

(g) We read in History, that one named Isidore.] 'Tis Eulogius himself, some of whose Letters are preserved in the Bibliotheca Patrum; in which he testifies that he had two Brothers, and one of them was named Isidore, who retired to Mentz, and came thither along with some Merchants. Upon this Account possibly they might call that Isidore, Mercator; perhaps also this is the Peccator; a Title, which they frequently gave themselves in that Age, and which Eulogius took often to himself.

(h) 'Tis visible that all these Passages drawn out of different Places have been patched together by some Impostor.] It is visible that the Authors themselves never borrowed those Passages out of these Letters. For, 1. Who will believe that an infinite Number of Writers would take long tedious Pieces out of these Letters, and never cite them? 2. These Passages being very long and tedious, it does not appear probable, that they copied them out of these Letters. 3. They are the exact Style of these Authors: Now who can imagine that the ancient Popes wrote so many different Styles? 4. They are likewise out of their Place in these Letters: Any Man may readily discover, that they are added and patched to the rest of the Discourse; whereas in the Books of the Fathers, from whence they are taken, they are in their proper natural Place.

(i) The French Bishops made great Difficulty in acknowledging them.] Hincmar rejected them, as having no Authority. Nicholas the First, in Epist. 42. to the Bishops of France, endeavours to confute those that rejected them; but since that time, they have been received and inserted into a Collection of Canons, though learned Men, always questioned the Truth of them. However at present no body dares undertake to defend them, the Imposture being so abominably gross, that all People may discover the Cheat at first sight. They may serve as a remarkable Example both of the Credulity of the preceding Ages, and the intolerable Impudence of Impostors.

Of Falſe Decretals, &c.

whereof was formerly tranſlated by Rufinus. Iſidore has added a ſecond to it, and they are both of them equally Suppoſititious. The firſt, becauſe it ſuppoſes that St. Clement wrote that Letter after the Death of St. Peter; whereas it is a Truth that has been conſtantly received, that St. James, to whom it is written, died before St. Peter. Secondly, 'Tis there ſaid, That St. Clement immediately ſucceeded St. Peter, which is contrary to the Ancients, that place St. Linus and Cletus, or Anacletus between them two. Thirdly, the Weſt is there ridiculouſly called the darkeſt part of the World. Fourthly, It is compoſed to juſtifie the Itinerary, or Book of the Voyages of St. Peter, which is Apocryphal. The ſecond Part, that was compoſed by Iſidore, is yet a more evident Cheat: For, 1. It was unknown in the time of Rufinus, and therefore has been invented ſince. 2. It is full of Texts of Scripture that follow the Tranſlation of St. Jerome: And we likewiſe meet ſeveral Paſſages there copied out of St. Cyril of Alexandria againſt Theodore of Mopſueſta, out of the Rule of St. Benedict, out of the Expoſition of the Creed by Venantius Fortunatus, out of St. Gregory, and Iſidore of Sevil. In ſhort, it ſpeaks of Arch-Prieſts and Primates, and we find abundance of Words and Expreſſions in it, that are unworthy of the time of St. Clement.

The ſecond Epiſtle of St. Clement directed to St. James, has likewiſe all the ſame Marks of Forgery. In the firſt place it makes mention of Sacraments, of the Habits in which the Prieſts celebrate the holy Sacrifice of the Maſs, of the Pall, of ſacred Veſſels, of Chalices; things that ſeem not to have been in uſe in the time of St. Clement. Secondly, It ſpeaks of the Oſtiarii, or Door-keepers, Arch-deacons, and other Eccleſiaſtical Officers, that were not then introduced into the Church. Thirdly, The Letter is writ in a barbarous Style. Fourthly, The Author alledges the Authority of his Anceſtors. Fifthly, It ordains ſeveral Practices of little or no Conſequence to be obſerved under pain of Excommunication for ſix Years. Sixthly, It ſuppoſes that St. Clement inſtructed St. James in the Actions of our bleſſed Saviour, and the Diſcipline of the Church. Seventhly, It alledges St. James his own Words, Work out your ſalvation with fear and trembling, under the Name of St. Peter's This Letter is full of divers Paſſages taken out of the Author of the Recognitions, out of St. Cyril of Alexandria, St. Proſper, Laurentius, Juſtinianus, and St. Gregory the Great. Laſtly, The Scriptures there cited, follow St. Jerome's Tranſlation. The Inſcription of the third Letter of St. Clement alone, is enough to diſcover the Falſity of it. It is directed, To all Suffragan Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, and others of the Clergy: To all Princes great and ſmall, and to all the Faithful. Now in St. Clement's time there were no great or ſmall Princes that were of the Church. Secondly, This Letter mentions Sub-deacons, an Order not then eſtabliſhed in the Church. Thirdly, It is for the moſt part wholly compoſed of Paſſages drawn out of the Books of Recognitions: We ought to reject the Fourth for the ſame Reaſons.

The Fifth is directed to St. James, in the Name of St. Clement Biſhop of Rome, and Succeſſor of St. Peter: Now St. James died before St. Peter, from whence it neceſſarily follows, that this Epiſtle cannot have been written by St. Clement. 2. The Author of this Letter ſeems to approve the Doctrine of the Nicolaitans; who taught, that Women ought to be kept in common, and the place where he maintains this Error, is borrowed out of the Book of Recognitions, in which a Platoniſt is introduced, diſputing upon this Occaſion. In ſhort, the Author of this Letter tells us, he was preſent at the Death of Ananias, and St. Clement was not as yet converted, when St. Peter inflicted that terrible Puniſhment upon Ananias. We muſt add to all the foregoing Arguments, this weighty Conſideration, that all theſe Letters are of a different Style from that of the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, which is undoubtedly St. Clement's. There were indeed ſome other Letters formerly aſſigned to this Saint, but they were different from thoſe which we have examined here; for St. Epiphanius, who mentions them, aſſures us, that he there commends Virginity, and ſpeaks very advantageouſly of the Prophets. Now there is nothing that looks like this in the above-mentioned Epiſtles that are chiefly ſtoln out of the Itinerary of St. Peter, an Apocryphal Work, forged by the Hereticks.

Of Falſe Decretals, &c.

The firſt Epiſtle attributed to Pope Anacletus, is viſibly Spurious: For, 1. He calls himſelf in this Letter, the Defender of St. Clement; now according to St. Irenæus, Euſebius, St. Jerome, and ſome other Ancients, Anacletus ſucceeded St. Peter and not St. Clement. 2. The Author of this Letter is pleaſed to ſay, that he received ſeveral things from his Anceſtors by way of Tradition; and could this Expreſſion poſſibly drop from a Man that liv'd in the time of the Apoſtles? 3. He ſays, that Appeals from ſecular Judges ought to be determined before Biſhops, but this was not cuſtomary in the time of the Apoſtles. 4. He tells us, that the Privileges and Laws of the Church ought to be confirmed, none of which were written in Anacletus's time. 5. He talks of Appeals from Eccleſiaſtical Judgments to the holy See, and mentions the different ſorts of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes. But theſe Queſtions were never debated under Anacletus, and when they came to be afterwards diſcuſſed, the Authority of this Letter was never alledged. 6 He ſpeaks not only of Primates and Metropolitans, but alſo of the Apocriſiarii, a Name unknown in the Roman Church till the ſixth Century. 7. The Style of this Letter is barbarous, and full of Soleciſms. 8. This Letter is compoſed of many Paſſages patched together, that are taken out of the third Council of Carthage, the Letters of St. Damaſus, St. Ambroſe, St. Auguſtine, Rufinus, Ennodius, Boniface of Mentz: And there is one Paſſage borrow'd from St. Cyprian's Book concerning Unity.

Nor are there leſs Proofs to diſcover the Impoſture of the ſecond Letter attributed to Pope Anacletus. For, 1. The Author of this Letter would neither have Biſhops to be accuſed, nor judged. 2. He ſays, That the Apoſtles choſe the 70 Diſciples; whereas it appears by the Goſpel, that our Saviour himſelf made the Choice. 3. He ſpeaks of Primates, of Patriarchs, and of Chriſtian Kings. 4. He mentions the Diviſion of the Eccleſiaſtick Provinces, which was made long after the Death of Anacletus. Laſtly, He inſerts into his Diſcourſe ſome Paſſages of the Nicene Council, of Damaſus, of St. Jerome, of St. Auguſtine, of St. Gregory, of Iſidore of Sevil, of the 5th. Council of Orleans, and the vulgar Latin. We ought to paſs the ſame Judgment upon the third Letter attributed to the ſame Pope for the ſame Reaſons.

The firſt Letter attributed to Pope Evariſtus contains, 1. Some things that have a relation to Clandeſtine Marriage, and ſeveral Ceremonies belonging to that Sacrament, all which can by no means agree with the time of Evariſtus. 2. 'Tis patched up of ſome Paſſages out of the vulgar Latin, the Letters of Innocent, and the Diſpute of Ithacius againſt Varimadus. 3. 'Tis dated under Conſuls, that were not in the time of Evariſtus's Pontificate.

The Author of the ſecond Letter attributed to the ſame Pope, after he has commended ſeveral Churches and Biſhops, inſerts many Texts of Scripture following the vulgar Latin, and imitates divers Phraſes of St. Cyprian and the African Fathers. He ſpeaks of Primates, and borrows abundance of things out of Rufinus, St. Gregory, and Iſidore of Sevil.

In the firſt Letter attributed to Pope Alexander, we find many things that diſcover its Novelty. 1. He mentions ſome Cuſtoms that were not uſed till after this Pope's time; as amongſt others, the Benediction of Water mingled with Salt. 2. He ſpeaks clearly and diſtinctly of the Trinity, and the Errors of the Arians and Sabellians are ſo openly rejected, that any Man in the World may ſee it was written ſince the Birth of thoſe Hereſies. 3. We there find ſome Paſſages taken taken out of Ithacius, Clarus, Syricius, Proclus, Ennodius, and Adrian the First.

In the second attributed to the same Pope, there is a Quotation out of the Council of Laodicea, that was held under Pope Martin the First, and the Scriptures there cited, follow the common Version. The third is composed of Passages borrow'd out of Sixtus the Pythagorean, St. Gregory and Isidore of Sevil. Besides the Date of it is false.

In the first Epistle attributed to St. Sixtus, he is called an Archbishop, a Word not used in his time. 2. The Author confutes those that maintain, that the Son was inferior to the Father. 3. The Author uses some Words and Expressions of Ithacius, of the fifth Council of Rome, of Flavian Archbishop of Constantinople, of Martin the first, of Adrian the first, and Sixtus the Pythagorean. In fine, this Letter is dated under the Consulate of Adrian, now there was no Consul of that Name, whilst St. Sixtus was Pope.

The second attributed to the same Pope, mentions consecrated Vessels, Appeals to Rome, the Grandeur of that Church. 'Tis there pretended, that all Bishops wait for the Pope's Decision, and are instructed by his Letters: Modes of Speaking never used by the first Bishops of Rome. 2. The Author borrows the better part of what he says concerning Pope Sixtus and Zosimus, out of the fifth Council of Rome, held under Symmachus and Martin the First. In a Word, the Date of the Consuls is the very same with that of the former, and consequently discovers the Falsity of it.

The Epistle attributed to Telesphorus, calls him an Archbishop; a Name unknown in the first Ages. 2. There is a Decree in it, to enjoyn three Masses on our Saviour's Nativity, a Custom which is not so ancient. 3. The Author supposes, that the Laity and Clergy could not accuse one another in Judgment. 4. He has borrowed several places out of Damasus, St. Jerome, Proclus, St. Leo, Flavian, and Ennodius, Authors of a much later Date than Telesphorus. 5. He makes use of the vulgar Translation of the Bible: In short, the Date of the Consuls is false and erroneous.

The two Letters ascribed to Higinus, are manifestly spurious. The First is made up of several places taken out of Ithacius, St. Leo, Martin the first, and Adrian the first. The second is stuffed with Texts of Scripture, according to the old Translation; the Date of the Consuls is equally false in both of them.

The Imposture of the first Letter attributed to Pope Pius, appears, 1. Because the Style of it is rough and barbarous. 2. Because it speaks of a pretended Revelation that appeared to Hermas, who is supposed to be the Brother of Pius. 3 Because there are some Passages manifestly copied out of the Books of Isidore of Sevil, St. Leo, the Fifth Council of Rome, Sixtus the Pythagorean, Adrian the First, and the vulgar Latin. Lastly, Because the Date of the Consuls is false, as well as in the second Letter, which is as evidently forged and spurious as the first. The Theodosian Code is cited there, and likewise a Decree is published in it, which ordains, that those Clergymen who are found disobedient to their Bishop, should be delivered over to the secular Power; which Passage does not agree with the time of Pope Pius the First.

The two other Letters attributed to the same Pope, are addressed to Justus Bishop of Vienna, and are taken out of the Archives of the Church of Vienna. Baronius pretends they are Genuine, because the Style of them is simple, and because they are agreeable to the time of that Pope; but there are far greater Reasons to incline us to believe, that they are spurious. 1. The barbarous Style. 2. The Name of Mass unknown to the Ancients. 3. The affected Terms; such as are, Superbeate, Senatoria, Cubilibus eternis, Perseverabilem, Primarches, Senatus pauper Christi. 4. It mentions Habits peculiar to Bishops. Lastly, These Letters were unknown to all Antiquity.

We find several Passages in the Letter attributed to Anicetus, which don't agree with the time of that Pope; as for instance, what is there laid down concerning the Ordinations of Bishops, Sacerdotal Tonsure, Archbishops, Primates, and Patriarchs, which were not instituted till long after; besides many other things of the same Nature. 2. The Author of that Letter uses the vulgar Latin, and copies abundance of things out of St. Leo, Adrian the First, and the Councils of Nice and Antioch. Lastly, He is mistaken in the Date of his Consuls.

Of False Decretals, &c.

The First Letter attributed to Soter, is full of Passages borrowed from Ithacius, St. Leo, and the vulgar Latin; and the Consuls there mentioned, held the Consulship some Years before Soter was Bishop of Rome.

The second Letter attributed to the same, is a Miscellany taken out of the Council of Laodicea, and out of Gelasius, Martin the First, and St. Leo. It speaks of Monks, of Palls, &c. Besides the Date of the Consuls does not agree with the Years of this Pope's Pontificate.

The Epistle of Eleutherus treats of Ecclesiastical Judgments in favour of the Court of Rome. The Author of it pretends, that all Causes relating to the Church, ought to be determined there, and that they cannot be tried in the Province; a Practice contrary to all Antiquity. He follows the vulgar Latin in his Quotations of Scripture, and cites a Text out of St. John, which he attributes to St. Paul. He copies several Passages out of the Popes St. Leo, Felix the Third, Anastasius, Adrian the First, Victor of Carthage, Hilary the Deacon, the fourth Council of Carthage, the sixth Council of Toledo, and the Theodosian Code. Lastly, The Date of the Consuls is false.

The Inscription of the first Epistle attributed to Victor, plainly discovers the Falsity of it. 1. It bestows upon him the Quality of Archbishop of the universal Church; a Title which the ancient Popes never gave themselves. 2. It is directed to Theophilus of Alexandria, who lived almost 200 Years after Victor. 3. The Author of this Letter speaks of the Judgments of Bishops, and Appeals to Rome, according to the Pretensions of the Bishops of Rome in the latter Ages. Lastly, He uses the Testimonies of St. Leo and Isidore. The second Letter attributed to the same Pope, is full of Passages borrowed from St. Leo, and the vulgar Latin. The third and fourth published by Johannes de Bosco, and taken out of the Library of the Abby of Fleuri, are written in a Style, that manifestly discovers their Novelty. The Scriptures there cited, follow the vulgar Latin. The first is directed to Desiderius Bishop of Vienna; now we don't read that there was ever any Bishop of that Name in Vienna, before the time of Pope Gregory the Great.

The first Letter of Zephirinus is composed of several Passages taken out of St. Leo, St. Prosper, Vigilius, St. Gregory, Martin the First, the Theodosian Code, Anianus, and Sixtus the Pythagorean. 2. We find in it the Names of Patriarch and Primate. 3. It treats about the Decisions of Bishops, and Appeals to the Holy See. 4. The Consul Gallicanus is named there; now there was none of that Name in the time of Zephirinus. Lastly, the Author of it supposes, that the 70 Disciples were chosen by the Apostles.

The second Letter attributed to the same Pope, is yet more visibly spurious. 1. The Author of it very impertinently cites the Imperial Laws in favour of the Bishops. 2. He speaks of the Apocrisiarii. 3. He heaps together the very thoughts and words of St. Prosper, Adrian, and Paul of Constantinople. 4. He cites the Canons of Pope Adrian as ancient Statutes. And at last, he says, that there were false Brethren in Africk that plundered and spoiled the Bishops: Which cannot possibly be true, for there was no Persecution in Africk in the time of Pope Zephirinus.

The first Epistle attributed to Calistus, is filled with Passages taken out of the Nicene Council, the fifth Council of Rome, St. Prosper, Gelasius, Symmachus, Isidorus, Anianus, and Sixtus the Pythagorean.

Of Falſe Decretals, &c.

He ſpeaks of Ember-Weeks, that were inſtituted long after the time of this Pope. The ſecond is likewiſe full of Paſſages drawn out of the Council of Antioch, the fourth Synod of Carthage, Simplicius, St. Auſtin, St Gregory, Adrian, and Sixtus the Pythygorean. We find ſeveral new Conſtitutions there.

The Author of the Epiſtle attributed to Urban, gives large Commendations of a Life, where all things are held in common; He ſpeaks of Vows, and the Revenue of the Church; he uſes the thoughts and words of St. Proſper, Euſebius, the Council of Paris, Gregory the Fourth, the Theodoſian Code, and the vulgar Latin.

The two Letters attributed to Pope Pontian, are made up of Paſſages taken out of the vulgar Latin, St. Gregory, St. Jerome, Sixtus the Pythagorean: The reſt is written in a barbarous Style.

The Author of the Epiſtle attributed to Anteros ſpeaks of a Biſhop of Epheſus named Felix, but unknown to the Ancients, and places one Euſebius amongſt the Biſhops of Alexandria, who is not to be found in the Catalogue of the Biſhops of that See. 2. Touching the Tranſlation of Biſhops, he eſtabliſhes ſome things, contrary to the Determinations of the Councils of Antioch, Sardica, and Chalcedon. And beſides, he cites the Words of St. Jerome, Syricius, Ennodius, St. Gregory, Iſidore, Martin the Firſt, and Sixtus the Pythagorean.

The Author of the firſt Epiſtle attributed to Fabian, ſuppoſes that Novatus came to Rome in his Papacy, though it was in Cornelius's time, according to the Teſtimony of St. Cyprian, Euſebius, and St. Jerome. Secondly, he borrows ſeveral Paſſages out of Ruſinus, St. Leo, St. Gregory, Adrian the Firſt, and Boniface of Mentz.

In the ſecond Epiſtle attributed to the ſame Pope, we read, 1. That diſobedient Clerks ought to be delivered up to the ſecular Arm. 2. That the holy Chriſm muſt be made yearly. 3. We find ſome places in it, that are copied out of the ſecond Council of Carthage, the fifth of Rome, the Council of Antioch, Syricius, St. Jerome, St. Auguſtine, Innocent, Zoſimus, Celeſtius, Proclus, St. Gregory, Iſidore, and Adrian. The third is full of Paſſages drawn out of the Letters of Pope Adrian, the Theodoſian Code, Anianus, Felix the Third, St. Gregory, the ſecond Council of Carthage, the Council of Toledo, and other publick Monuments later than Fabian.

The firſt Letter attributed to Cornelius is full of Errors; 'Tis there ſaid, Firſt, that the Bodies of St. Peter and St. Paul were removed out of the Catacombs; which appears to be falſe by the Teſtimony of St. Gregory, who tells us in the third Letter of his third Book, that the Body of St. Paul lay always near the Porta Oſtia, and St. Peter's in the Vatican. Secondly, ſome Paſſages are to be found in this Letter, taken out of the Epiſtles of Martin the Firſt, and St. Leo. The ſecond is a Collection of ſeveral things out of the Conſtantinopolitan Council under Flavian, the firſt and third Council of Carthage, the Council of Chalcedon, the fifth of Rome, St. Ambroſe, St. Jerome, and Boniface of Mentz; but nothing ſhows the Impoſture of theſe two Letters more palpably, than the difference of Style from thoſe that truly belong to Cornelius, which are to be ſeen in St. Cyprian, with the Fragment of one in Euſebius. There is another Letter of his beſides, to Lupicinus Biſhop of Vienna, which is writ in a Style as different from that of the true Cornelius, as any of the reſt; we find the word Maſs in it, which was unknown to the Authors, that lived in the time of this Pope.

Of Falſe Decretals, &c.

The Epiſtle attributed to Lucius, is full of Citations out of the vulgar Latin, and of ſeveral Paſſages taken out of the firſt Council of Arles, the third of Carthage, that of Milevis, St. Leo, Gregory, Agatho, Adrian, and Sixtus the Pythagorean: Beſides, it is dated ſix Months before the Election of Lucius.

The two Epiſtles attributed to Stephanus, are filled with Citations out of modern Authors, and Statutes, that don't at all agree with the time of this Pope, and conſequently are ſpurious.

For the ſame Reaſons, we muſt paſs the ſame Judgment of the two Letters of Sixtus the Second, the two of Pope Dionyſius, the three of St. Felix the Firſt, the two of Eutychianus, that of Carus, the two of Marcellinus, thoſe of Marcellus, the three of Euſebius, the Letter and Decree of Miltiades, and the reſt of the Letters of the Popes collected by Iſidore, that are full of ſeveral Paſſages taken out of the Fathers, Popes, and Councils more modern than the very Popes, by whom they are pretended to be written; and in which many things are to be found, that don't in the leaſt agree with the true Hiſtory of thoſe times, and were purpoſely ſaid to favour the Court of Rome, and eſtabliſh her Pretenſions againſt the Rights of Biſhops, and the Liberties of the Churches. But it would take up too much time to ſhow the groſs Falſity of theſe Monuments, that are now rejected by a common Conſent, and even by thoſe Authors, that are moſt favourable to the Court of Rome, who are obliged to abandon the Patronage of theſe Epiſtles, though they have done a great deal of Service in eſtabliſhing the greatneſs of the Court of Rome, and ruining the ancient Diſcipline of the Church, eſpecially in relation to Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions, and Rights of Biſhops.

An Abridgment of the Doctrine, Diſcipline, and Morality of the Three Firſt Ages of the Church.

An Abridgment of the Doctrine, &c.

After having given a Summary of what is contained in the Works of the Eccleſiaſtical Authors for the three firſt Ages of the Church, I ſuppoſed it wou'd not be amiſs, to preſent the Reader with an Abridgment alſo of the Theology of the primitive Chriſtians. This Deſign, beſides the relation it had to the Work it ſelf, ſeem'd in my Opinion to be the principal Fruit and Advantage that could be gathered from it. For the ultimate Scope and End, which a Man ought to propoſe to himſelf in reading the Eccleſiaſtical Authors, and their Hiſtory, is not to gratifie a vain fooliſh Curioſity, but to learn Religion thereby. We muſt not ſtudy theſe Matters, only to make a pompous Oſtentation of our Knowledge, but to become better Chriſtians, to become more certain of the Doctrine of the Church, more reſpectful to its Diſcipline, and better inſtructed in its holy Morality. For all Theology reduces it ſelf to theſe three Points, Doctrine, Diſcipline and Morality. Doctrine concerns the Articles of Faith that our Religion teaches us; Diſcipline concerns the Government of the Church; and Morality teaches us, what things we are to do, and what we are to forbear. Hereticks overthrow the Doctrine of the Church by their Errors. Schiſmaticks deſtroy its Diſcipline by violating the Orders and Rules of the Church: And laſtly, the vitious Chriſtian diſcards and lays aſide the Laws of its Morality, by living after an irregular Manner. For the better avoiding theſe Rocks and Precipices, it is exceeding requiſite for all Chriſtians, to draw out of the Tradition of the ancient Church, that is to ſay, out of the Books of the primitive Fathers, who are the unqueſtionable Witneſſes of the Opinion of the Church in their own times; to draw, I ſay, from thence the Doctrine, which they are obliged to believe, to examine the Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, which they are to revere and obey, and laſtly from thence to learn the moſt holy Rules of the Chriſtian Morality.

An

An Abridgment of the Doctrine.

An Abridgment of Doctrine.

THE Doctrine of the Church was always the ſame, and will be ever ſo till the End of the World: For 'tis utterly impoſſible that the true Church ſhould ceaſe to be, or that the true Church ſhould not teach the Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt, becauſe whether ſhe ſhould teach a Doctrine different from that of Jeſus Chriſt, or whether ſhe ſhould not teach the Doctrine of our Bleſſed Saviour, in both theſe Caſes ſhe would ceaſe to be the true Church. Jeſus Chriſt, as St. Irenæus, Tertullian, and all the reſt of the Ancients have obſerved, taught his Apoſtles all the Truths of Faith. The Apoſtles publiſhed them throughout all the Earth, and opened them to all the Churches in the World, whoſe Doctrine is found to be comformable each to other in Articles of Faith. This Doctrine was always preſerved in the Church, which is the Pillar and Foundation of Truth. 'Tis indeed very true, that they did not always make uſe of the ſame Terms, and that before the Birth of Hereſies, they did not obſerve that precaution in ſpeaking of Myſteries, which they did afterwards, when they were attack'd by the Hereticks: But ſtill the Foundation of Doctrine was always the ſame as to the principal Articles of our Faith. We muſt likewiſe acknowledge, that there were ſome Errors very frequent in the firſt Ages of the Church, that have been rejected ſince, but then they don't concern the principal Articles of our Faith; and beſides were never looked upon to be the received Doctrine of the Church, but only the moſt common Opinions. Theſe previous Obſervations will be confirmed by an Abridgment of the Doctrine of the Church, as it is delivered by the Authors of the three firſt Centuries; which we are going to repreſent in as few Words as poſſibly we can.

They taught, That the Grounds and Principles of Faith, were the Holy Scriptures, and Tradition; that we ought to believe Myſteries, though we were not able to comprehend them; they ſpoke of the Nature of God and of his Attributes after a moſt excellent Manner; they believed him to be Inviſible, Eternal, Incorruptible, &c. They have frequently diſcourſed of his Providence, his Power, his Bounty, his Mercy, and his Goodneſs; they wrote very ſharply againſt the falſe Divinities of the Pagans, and the Errors of Hereticks, who imagined that there cou'd be above one Soveraign and Independent Being; they proved that God created all Things, and even Matter it ſelf, which was not Eternal; they acknowledged the Trinity of the three Perſons in one only God, the Divinity and Eternity of the Word, and of the Holy Ghoſt; they maintain'd that the Word was from all Eternity in God, as a Perſon diſtinct from the Father; that the Father created the World by him, and that he governs it, and that it was the Perſon of the Word that appear'd to the ancient Patriarchs under different Figures, and who was at laſt Incarnate; that Jeſus Chriſt was the Word made Man, God and Man all together, compoſed of two entire and different Natures; that he had a Soul and Body like unto ours; that he took this Body in the Womb of the Virgin Mary; that his Fleſh was real and true; that he ſuffered and was really Dead; that he made himſelf Man, to ſave the World that was loſt by the Sin of the firſt Man; that he came to diſcover the Truth to them, to ſhow them an Example; and that he redeemed them by his Death; that he deſcended into Hell, and afterwards roſe again from the Dead; that he will come at the Day of Judgment to judge all Men; that he will condemn the Wicked to everlaſting Puniſhments, and reward the Good with eternal Happineſs, after he has raiſed up both the one and the other. All the Fathers, of whom we have ſpoken, make Profeſſion of this Faith, and aſſure us, that this is the Doctrine, which all the Churches in the World have received from the Apoſtles, and that it was neceſſary to believe it in order to become a Chriſtian. They ſometimes make uſe of ſome Expreſſions concerning the Perſon of the Word, that ſeem to derogate from his Divinity; as for inſtance, when they ſay, that the Word was not begotten, till the Beginning of the World; that he is viſible, and that the Father is inviſible; that he is one Portion of the Subſtance of the Father, and that the Father is all Subſtance. But theſe ways of ſpeaking, have a very good Meaning in theſe Authors, as we have often obſerved. For when they ſay, that the Word was begotten at the Beginning of the World, and that he was not the Son before; they don't mean that the Word began only to exiſt then, ſince they acknowledge he exiſted before, and was in God from all Eternity: But they take the Word Generation in another Senſe than we do; giving this Name to a certain Prolation, or Emiſſion of the Word, which they imagine was done, when God reſolved to create the World; and 'tis in this ſenſe they ſay, that the Word who was from all Eternity in God, was generated or begotten at that time, and that he had not always the Quality of the Son. We have likewiſe explained in what ſenſe they ſay, that the Word is viſible, and the Father inviſible; and we have made it evidently appear, that they did not believe, that the Word was therefore of a different Nature from the Father, but only that they attributed Viſibility to the Son, as they aſcribed Almightineſs to the Father: Saying, that it is through the Son, that God makes every external Being, and conſequently that by him he renders himſelf viſible to Mankind. This Manner of Speaking is ſo little contrary to the Divinity of the Word, that it is to be found in Athanaſius, and in other Fathers that lived after the Nicene Council. In ſhort, when they ſay that the Son was a Portion of the Subſtance of the Father, we are ſo far from being able to conclude that they were of Arius's Opinion, that on the contrary, it follows from thence, that they believed the Son was not created of Nothing, as Arius afterwards taught, but that he was conſubſtantial to the Father; that is to ſay, of the ſame Subſtance, as the Nicene Council has determined. But wherefore do they ſay, that the Son is only ſomething derived from the Subſtance of the Father? Is it becauſe they believed he was inferior to the Father? Not at all, but it was becauſe they conceived, that the Father, as having all the Divinity in him, communicated it to the Son, and to the Holy Ghoſt. 'Tis upon this account that they uſually aſcribe to the Perſon of the Father all the Attributes of the Godhead, as we may ſee in the Creed, where after it is ſaid, I believe in God, they add, Almighty, Creator of Heaven and Earth, &c. and yet we muſt not therefore ſay, that theſe Attributes don't agree to the Son and the Holy Ghoſt, but only that they are attributed to the Father; becauſe he is the Fountain and Original of the Divinity, and becauſe the Son and the Holy Ghoſt receive it from him. I paſs over in Silence ſome feeble Objections, that are only founded upon the Ambiguity of the Words Nature and Creation, that have not been as yet determined to a certain ſenſe, as alſo the ſignification of the word Hypoſtaſis has been a long time undetermined. Thus when the Son is called another Subſtance than the Father, (though that is but very ſeldom) yet we are not to conclude from thence, that the Perſon who ſpeaks after this Manner, does not believe him to be truly God, becauſe the Words of Nature and Subſtance were not at that time determined to the ſenſe, they received afterwards, and becauſe they may be taken for a Perſon ſubſiſting. This is ſo true, that Gregory Nazianzen, and ſome others that lived in a time, when theſe Expreſſions were determined, forbore not to ſay ſometimes that the Father was the firſt Subſtance or Nature, and the Son the ſecond: And thus it is ordinary for thoſe, that acknowledged the Divinity of the Word, to ſay, that God made or created him, though they believe that he was not created of Nothing, but begotten of the Divine Subſtance.

As to the Incarnation, the Fathers of the three firſt Centuries have ſaid nothing that in the leaſt ſeems to favour the Errors of the Paulianiſts, the Apollinariſts, the Neſtorians, or the Eutychians; and they always diſtinguiſhed two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, and admitted the Proprieties of theſe Natures without Confuſion, and being changed one into the other, yet re-united at the ſame time in the ſame Perſon, God and Man both together. They likewiſe plainly ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt was born of a Virgin by the Operation of the Holy Ghoſt, without Concupiſcence and without Sin. And though they frequently tell us, that the benefit of the Incarnation is the Inſtruction, and the Example which Jeſus Chriſt has given us; yet they acknowledge beſides that, that he has truly redeemed us by his Death; and that he has ſatisfied God for us. They believed, that we cou'd not be ſaved without believing in him; and for that Reaſon they imagined, that he deſcended into Hell, as well as the Apoſtles after him, to preach the Goſpel there to the Jews and Gentiles, who had known the true God, and had lived virtuouſly. They were of Opinion, that the Day of Judgment was at hand; that the Souls of Men until that Day, were neither perfectly happy nor miſerable, though they underwent ſome Puniſhment beforehand, or were at reſt, according to the proportion of the Good or Evil they had done in their Bodies. They almoſt univerſally believed with Papias, that Jeſus Chriſt was to reign a thouſand Years upon Earth, but they never aſſerted that Opinion as a Matter of Faith. They were ſufficiently divided about the Nature of the Soul; ſome of them ſuppoſed it to be corporeal, others declared, that they believed it to have been ſpiritual; but however the better part of them agreed that it was immortal, that the Juſt wou'd be rewarded with everlaſting Happineſs, and the Wicked everlaſtingly puniſhed. They never diſquieted themſelves in examining wherein the Beatitude conſiſted, but they were perſuaded, that the Wicked ſhould be puniſhed with Fire, and that not metaphorical, but real. They advanced Man's Free-will very highly, and maintained that he might carry himſelf either to Good or Evil; and yet they acknowledged, that ſince the tranſgreſſion of the firſt Man, we were naturally inclined to Evil, and that we ſtood in need of the Aſſiſtance and Grace of God to determine us to what was Good. They did not philoſophize too far about the Nature, and ſeveral Species of Angels, but only ſatisfied themſelves, that there were good Angels, and likewiſe bad ones called Dæmons. They were of Opinion, that both the one and the other were corporeal, and imagined that the bad Angels were loſt for their love of Women, and they poſitively aſſerted, that the good ones took care of things below. All of them were ſenſible of the Wounds and Puniſhment of Adam's Sin, but they don't ſeem to agree, that Infants were born ſubject to Sin, and worthy of Damnation. Nevertheleſs, this appears to be the common Opinion; as is evident from St. Cyprian, who ſays, "That it was re-"quiſite to baptize Infants before the eighth Day, "for fear leſt if they died without Baptiſm, this De-"lay ſhould prove the occaſion of their Deſtruction. They often ſpoke of the Neceſſity and wonderful Effects of Baptiſm, and ſaid that the Holy Ghoſt deſcended by the Impoſition of the Hands of the Biſhop. They maintained, that the Church had Power to reconcile thoſe that repented of their Sins; and did not doubt but that the Euchariſt was the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, and accordingly called it by that Name. They extolled Virginity without condemning Marriage, they honoured the Saints and Martyrs as the Servants of God, they ſpoke of the Virgin Mary with a great deal of reſpect, and yet with no leſs diſcretion and adviſedneſs. St. Clement affirms, that ſhe continued a Virgin after her Delivery; but Origen, Tertullian, and ſome others, were of the contrary Opinion. We find nothing in the three firſt Ages of the Church, either for or againſt the Aſſumption; there is a Paſſage in St. Irenæus, that is not favourable to the immaculate Conception. They believed that the Holy Scriptures were written by the Inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, that they contain all the principal Articles of our Faith; that though they are obſcure in ſome places, yet they are clear enough in many others, and that even their Obſcurity has its Uſe; and that all Chriſtians might read them, provided they made good uſe of them: That it is neceſſary to believe what the Scripture, Tradition, and the Church teach us, without endeavouring to ſearch too deep into the Myſteries of our Religion, and diſputing about them. They acknowledged no other Books of the Old Teſtament to be canonical, but thoſe that were received into the Canon of the Jews, though now and then they cited ſome other Books as very good and uſeful. In the New Teſtament they received as canonical the four Evangeliſts, the fourteen Epiſtles of St. Paul, (though ſome of them queſtioned that to the Hebrews, and many Perſons attributed it to another, and not to St. Paul) the firſt Epiſtles of St. John, and of St. Peter. The Epiſtles of St. James and St. Jude. The ſecond of St. Peter, the ſecond and third of St. John were received by ſome, and rejected by others, as well as the Apocalypſe. They ſometimes cited the Apochryphal Books, but never reckoned them amongſt the canonical Scriptures.

Thus I have given you a ſhort Summary of part of the Opinions of the Fathers in the three firſt Ages of the Church. The moſt part of the Proofs, which I have here laid down, are to be found in the Abridgment of thoſe Authors, that I have made in this Volume; and I don't in the leaſt queſtion, but that thoſe Perſons, who will carefully read over the ſame Authors, will be ſenſible, that I have impoſed nothing upon them, and that their Doctrine is what I have now repreſented it.

An Abridgment of the Diſcipline.

An Abridgment of the Diſcipline.

WE cannot ſay of the Diſcipline of the Church, what we have affirmed concerning its Doctrine; viz. That it is the ſame in all Times, and all Places; becauſe it is an undeniable Truth, that it has been different in many Churches, and has been from time to time ſubject to Change. We ought not however to conclude from this Principle, that it is unneceſſary to ſtudy the Primitive Diſcipline, or that we are obliged only to learn that of the Time and Church where we live; for beſides, that thoſe Perſons who are ignorant of the Diſcipline of the Primitive Church, cannot pretend to underſtand the Books of the Ancients, this ancient Diſcipline is the Foundation of ours: And though the Exterior part has been changed, yet the Spirit of the Church is always the ſame. It is not therefore an unprofitable Labour as ſome have vainly imagined, to buſie ones ſelf in examining the Diſcipline of the Ancient Church; on the contrary it is a Study extremely uſeful, and neceſſary for a Divine.

It muſt be acknowledged that the Diſcipline that was obſerved in the Infancy of the Church, however Holy it was in its Simplicity, yet was not arrived to its Perfection; for the Apoſtles altogether applying themſelves to what was neceſſary at the beginning, were content to preach the Doctrine and Morality of our Bleſſed Saviour, without giving themſelves the trouble to regulate what related to the Ceremonies, or Diſcipline of the Church. Nevertheleſs we are not to imagine, that they entirely neglected glected it, and St. John, who lived longer than the rest of the Apostles, seems to have applied himself more particularly to it. But the Successors of the Apostles, by little and little, regulated the Ceremonies, that ought to be observed, as well in the Administration of the Sacraments, as in the Assemblies of Christians, and made particular Orders about the Government of Churches, the Form of Ecclesiastical Judicatures, and many other Points of Discipline.

These Ceremonies were exceedingly augmented in the Fourth Century, when the Church began to enjoy the benefits of Peace and Tranquillity, and Publickly celebrated the Divine Service in the time of the Emperor Constantine. Then it was that the Bishops met together with Liberty, being supported by the Authority of Princes; and made abundance of Rules concerning the Government of the Church, the Rights of the Bishops of the greater Sees, the Forms of Judicature, and infinite Numbers of other Matters.

We have here obliged our selves to speak only of the Discipline, that was observed in the Three First Ages of the Church: Then it was plain and simple, and had scarce any other Splendor to recommend it, but what the Holiness of the Manners and Lives of the Christians gave to it. They assembled every Sunday in particular, in certain Places appointed and set apart for Publick Devotion, where they continued a long time in Prayer, which they pronounced with a low Voice, without Singing it aloud, as afterwards they did. The Bishop, or in his Absence, the Minister presided in that Congregation, where they read the Holy Scriptures, and oftentimes the Bishop preached the Word of God. The Festivals of our Blessed Saviour's Nativity, of Easter, and Whitsunday were celebrated even in those Days with great Solemnity. It was not their Custom on Sundays, as likewise from Easter to Whitsunday, to pray Kneeling, and when they offered up their Prayers, they alway turned to the East. The places where they met were plain and without Ornament, and it seems probable, that in those times the use of Images, of Crosses, and Incense was not common. They did not give the Name of Temple to their Houses of Publick Prayer, nor that of Altar to the Table upon which they celebrated the Eucharist; they had often their Feasts of Charity and Benevolence, which they called Agapæ, where all Comers were kindly entertained.

They pray'd for the Dead, and made Oblations for them, and celebrated the Sacrifice of the Mass in Commemoration of them; the Christians gave one another a Kiss of Peace; they called one another by the Name of Brethren, and continually made the sign of the Cross. They pray'd to Saints and Martyrs, and solemnized the day of their Death with Joy, and were persuaded that they interceded with God in behalf of the Living. They baptized with some Ceremonies, those that were well Instructed in their Religion, and who had given satisfactory Signs of their sincere Conversion; they generally dipt them thrice in the Water, invoking the Name of the Holy Trinity, and they never administred the Sacrament solemnly, but at the Feasts of Easter and Pentecost. In Africk towards the third Age of the Church, they made use of Holy Water in Baptizing their Neophytes. They anointed them with Oil after Baptism, and imagined that this Ceremony convey'd some Internal Benefit to them, and likewise in some Churches they gave them Milk and Honey to taste. They imposed hands upon them, that the plenitude of the Holy Ghost might descend on them, and they considered this Imposition of Hands, which was generally reserved for the Bishop, as a distinct Sacrament from Baptism.

Baptism was never reiterated amongst them, but by Hereticks in some particular Churches, and if after it any Christians fell into Sin, of which they were convinced, or made a Confession to the Priest, they were enjoyn'd a severe Penance; that is to say, they were thrown out of the Communion of the Church, forbidden the Assemblies of the Faithful, and obliged to fast, to humble and mortifie themselves Publickly at the Church-Porch. In some Churches, and particularly in those of Africk and Rome, there was a time, when they never admitted to Peace those that fell into Idolatry, or those that had committed Murder and Adultery. They afterwards consented to some relaxation for Murderers, and Adulterers. and afterwards for Idolaters themselves, whom they reconciled to the Church, either at the point of Death, or after a long and severe Penance. 'Tis true indeed, they did not use the same Severity in all Churches, and in some they admitted Offenders to a Reconciliation after a short Penance, and they likewise abated somewhat of the Rigour of it at the recommendation of the Martyrs. As for the Clergy, those of them that fell into any notorious Sin, were not only deprived for ever from the Ministry, but also obliged to undergo Publick Penance, at least in some Churches. They that had once undergone this Scandal in the Face of the Congregation were never admitted into the Clergy. They imposed this course of Repentance never but once, and whoever fell into his vitious Transgressions the second Time, could never be reconciled to the Church, and was to expect his Pardon from God alone. The Sentence of Excommunication was pronounced against Hereticks, the Disturbers of Discipline, and those Christians that persisted in a profligate irregular Life. He that was excommunicated by a Bishop, could be no where received into Communion. The Matter of the Eucharist was ordinary Bread, and Wine mingled with Water; the Faithful made this Offering, and the Priest or the Bishop that presided in the Assembly, said Prayers and Thanksgivings over the Bread and over the Chalice, and after those Prayers were ended, all the Congregation answered Amen. They divided the Consecrated Bread into several pieces, and the Deacons distributed them to the Standers by, and gave them also the Consecrated Wine. In some Churches this Distribution was reserved for the Priests, and in others every Man approached near the Table, and took his Portion of the Eucharist himself. All the Christians took it with wonderful respect, protesting they received the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ: They received the Species of Bread in their hands, and likewise the Eucharist was given to Infants under the Species of Wine. They generally received it in the Morning before they had eaten, but this Custom was not entirely established as a Law, and sometimes they received it in the midst of a Repast. This Celebration of the Eucharist was frequently called a Sacrifice; the Priest recited several Prayers both before and after Consecration, and St. Cyprian observes, that he said, Lift up your hearts to God: And the People answered, We have lifted them up to the Lord. The manner of celebrating this Sacrament was Simple, and without abundance of Ceremonies, as we have already observed in another place. They received the Eucharist often, and generally whenever they met together in the Assemblies of the Faithful: but they believed that they were obliged to live Piously, and according to the Holy Rules of the Gospel, that they might partake of this Celestial Food worthily, and after a manner that might be beneficial to them. There is no mention made, in the three First Ages of the Church, of Anointing the Sick, which St. James speaks of; perhaps because it was seldom used in that time. Marriage was celebrated in presence of the Priests, and was confirmed by some Oblation. Second Marriages were reputed Scandalous; nay, they were condemned by some Persons. In some Churches they allowed the Husband to send home his Wife and marry another, in case of Adultery only: But this was no general Custom amongst them. They took great Care in the Choice of their Ministers to elect such Persons, whose Life and Conversation were unblameable. After the Death of those who had been ordained by the Apoſtles, the People elected. Though the Names of Biſhops and Presbyters were frequently confounded; yet the Biſhops were above the Presbyters. The Biſhops were generally ordained by their Brethren, who impoſed their Hands upon them, and the Prieſts by the Impoſition of their Biſhop and the Clergy. The Biſhop was mightily reſpected and conſidered by them: Nothing of conſiderable moment in the Church could be done without him, even Baptiſm it ſelf was reſerved for him, but then he treated his Presbyters as Brethren, and did nothing without their Advice. There were Deacons in the Times of the Apoſtles, to whom belonged the Adminiſtration of Sacred Things at the beginning of the Church, and to whom in ſome places it was allowed to lay hands upon Penitents in caſe of Neceſſity. The Deaconneſſes alſo are very Ancient. As for the Sub-Deacons, and other inferior Orders, they were afterwards inſtituted; yet they were in uſe in St. Cyprian's time.

All the Biſhops were perſuaded, that they received their Office immediately from Jeſus Chriſt, and that Providence had aſſigned to each of them a Portion of the Flock of the Heavenly Paſtor to govern, in ſuch a manner however, as that in an exigence or time of Neceſſity, they were to relieve the wants of all Churches. They lived in great Union together, and preſerved a mutual Correſpondence by Letters, which they ſent to one another. The Biſhops of great Cities had their Prerogatives in Ordinations, and in Councils; and as in Civil Affairs Men generally had recourſe to the Civil Metropolis; ſo likewiſe in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, they conſulted with the Biſhop of the Metropolitan City. The Churches of the Three Principal Cities of the World were looked upon as Chief, and their Biſhops attributed great Prerogatives to themſelves. The Church of Rome founded by St. Peter and St. Paul, was conſider'd as firſt, and its Biſhop, as firſt amongſt all the Biſhops of the World; yet they did not believe him to be Infallible, and though they frequently conſulted him, and his Advice was of great Conſequence, yet they did not receive it blind-fold and implicitly, every Biſhop imagining himſelf to have a Right to judge in Eccleſiaſtical Matters. They had a prodigious reſpect for the Deciſions of Councils; and the Opinion of the Univerſal Church, that is to ſay, of all the Churches in the World, paſſed for an Infallible Rule of Faith. They eſteemed thoſe Perſons, that were ſeparated from the viſible Society of the Church, to be Schiſmaticks, for whom no Salvation was to be had. The Clergy were not diſtinguiſhed from others by any peculiar Habits, but by the Sanctity of their Life and Manners, they were removed from all kind of Avarice, and carefully avoided every thing that ſeem'd to carry the appearance of ſcandalous, filthy Lucre. They adminiſtred the Sacrament gratis, and believed it to be an abominable Crime to give or receive any thing for a Spiritual Bleſſing. Tithes were not then appropriated to them, but the People maintained them voluntarily at their own expence. The Goods of the Church were in common between the Prieſts and Biſhop, who had the Adminiſtration of them; the Offerings were reſerved for the Poor; the Paſtors never abandoned the Flock that was committed to their Care, but with infinite regret, and only in caſe of Neceſſity, and carefully acquitted themſelves in all the Functions of the Miniſtry. The Clergy were prohibited to meddle with any Civil and Secular Affairs. They were ordained againſt their Will, and did not remove from one Church to another, out of a Principle of Intereſt, or Ambition. They were extremely Chaſt and Regular. It was lawful for Prieſts to keep the Wives they married before they were ordained, but Marriage was never permitted after Ordination; but both the one and the other was allowed to Deacons. Monks were not as yet inſtituted; but there were abundance of Perſons of both Sexes amongſt the Chriſtians, that lived in a ſtate of Celibacy, and chearfully ſubmitted to the auſterities of an Aſcetick Life. There were likewiſe ſome Women in the Third Age of the Church, that ſolemnly obliged themſelves to keep their Virginity all their Life-time. All Chriſtians forbore to eat of any Meat that was ſtrangled, or Blood, or things offered to Idols, which were called Idolothyta. They faſted with great rigour before Eaſter, ſome a longer, and others a ſhorter ſpace, according to the different Cuſtoms of Churches: Beſides this, they ordinarily faſted every Wedneſday and Friday, till Three a Clock in the Afternoon only, and many of them ſpent theſe Days in Prayers, which they called their Stations. They likewiſe faſted and mortified themſelves in Times of Publick Calamities, and when they were in the rank of Penitents. They were of Opinion, that it was unlawful to faſt on Sundays, and from Eaſter to Whitſuntide. They buried the Bodies of the Deceaſed in the Earth, and did not approve of the Cuſtom of thoſe that burnt them.

Theſe are the Principal Points of the Diſcipline of the Ancient Church, which I have collected with all the brevity and exactneſs that was poſſible. But no body ought to conclude from what has been ſaid here, that all theſe things were practiſed in all Churches, and in all times of the three Firſt Centuries. Some began to be uſed but in the Third Age, and others were only obſerved in ſome particular Churches. After all, it muſt be confeſſed, that the Diſcipline of the Church has been ſo extremely different, and ſo often altered, that it is almoſt impoſſible to ſay any thing poſitively concerning it.

An Abridgment of the Morality.

THE Morality of the Goſpel has been as immutable as its Doctrine, but it has moreover this Advantage, that though there have been abundance of lewd, wicked Chriſtians in the World, who lived in a manner contrary to the Rules of the Evangelical Morality; yet there were never any Perſons to be found in all Antiquity, ſo raſh as to overthrow the Rules of this Morality, and to eſtabliſh Maxims oppoſite to it; for, there was ſcarce ever any Diſpute in the Church, or any different Sentiments about the Queſtions of Morality. They followed the Precepts of the Goſpel according to the Letter, and exhorted all the Faithful to imitate the Life of Jeſus Chriſt, as a Model of what they were to obſerve. I ſhould never have done, if I ſhould endeavour to heap together all the Principles or Heads of Morality, that are to be found in the Authors of the three Firſt Ages: It is ſufficient to ſay, that they not only carried the Profeſſors of Chriſtianity to obſerve the Precepts of the Decalogue and the Natural Law, but that they likewiſe recommended to them the embracing the Perfection of the Chriſtian Morality. They maintained, that the moſt agreeable Sacrifice that could be offered to God, was to give him a contrite Heart; that it was neceſſary to love him above all things in order to be juſt; that thoſe that were influenced only by a Principle of ſervile Fear, were not really upright; that we ought to die, and ſuffer all Puniſhments imaginable, rather than be guilty of any thing, that might give the World occaſion to believe, that we have renounced or deſpiſed the Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt; that we ought to love our Neighbour as our ſelf, and aſſiſt and help him, to wiſh Ill to no body, to render Good for Evil, and pray for thoſe that perſecute us. They exhorted the Faithful to give large Alms, to viſit the Poor, to comfort the Sick, and thoſe that were impriſoned upon the account of Religion. They recommended commended it to the Consideration of those Christians that were Rich and Powerful, to employ the Superfluities of their Fortune in these indispensable Duties, and to use the World without being wedded to it; They taught them, that they were obliged not only to avoid Criminal Pleasures, such as Debauchery, and those that were dangerous, such as the publick Shows and Comedies, but also all unprofitable Pleasures that had no other end but the meer entertainment of the Senses; that they ought to content themselves with what was necessary, without a sollicitous pursuit and search after those things that served only for Pleasure or Luxury: That Christian Women ought to be extremely Modest in their Garb and Dress. They commanded all Persons of whatsoever Condition, to be obedient to all Emperors, Magistrates and Secular Powers. They exhorted Wives to love their Husbands, Husbands to cherish their Wives, Children to obey their Fathers and Mothers, and Parents to have a Care of their Children, and reprehend them without bitterness; they admonished the Faithful to be submissive to their Pastors; and the Pastors to have a great deal of Charity and Zeal for their Flock.

An Abridgment of Morality.

In a word, They prescribed all the Rules and Holy Maxims of the Gospel to the Observation of Christians, and exhorted them to lead a Life conformable to them. But what is most to be admired, this excellent System of Morality was not only to be found in the Writings of the First Christians; but it appeared and glittered in their Lives and Actions. We say not great things, says one of these Ancients, but we live them. Non eloquimur magna, sed vivimus.

Of the Councils held in the Fourth Age.

The Council of Sinuessa. 303.

THIS Council of Sinuessa would be the First Council held in this Century, if the Acts which bear the Name of this Council were Genuine: But it is notoriously known among all Learned Men, that they are supposititious, and that the Story on which they are grounded is a Fable which has no Foundation in Antiquity. It is suppos'd in those Acts, That this Council was assembled at the beginning of the Fourth Century, upon occasion of the Fall of the Pope Marcellinus, who had sacrificed to Idols; That it was held at Sinuessa in a Grotto; That there were 300 Bishops present at it; That the Pope Marcellinus having confess'd his Fault condemn'd himself, and that the Bishops durst not depose him, till he had pronounced Sentence upon himself. None of these things have any probability: For, First, This History is not founded upon the Testimony of any ancient Author: Secondly, St. Austine in his Book against Petilian, Ch. 16. defends the Innocence of Marcellinus against this Donatist, who accused him of having sacrificed to Idols; and therefore to maintain the Acts of the Council of Sinuessa, is to take part with the Donatists against the Church. 'Tis more probable that they were forg'd by the Donatists to support the Accusation which they had made against this Holy Bishop without Foundation. Thirdly, what probability is there that 300 Bishops could be assembled in the time of the most violent Persecution that ever the Church suffer'd, since it was all that Constantine could do, to assemble a Council so numerous, at a time when the Church was flourishing, and much farther spread. And certainly if the Catholick Bishops at the Conference of Carthage could reject the Acts of the Council of Cirtha, by saying, that there was no probability that a Council could be assembled in the time of Persecution, tho' this Council was but a Synod of some African Bishops, what may not be said against a Synod that is suppos'd to consist of 300 Bishops? Fourthly, The Style of these Acts is barbarous, and contains many things which do not in the least belong to Marcellinus's Age. They make the Pagan High-Priest (whom they ridiculously call the Pontiff of the Capitol,) produce what is said in Holy Scripture of the Adoration of the Wise-Men, to prove that Incense should be offered to Idols. 'Tis said, that a 100 Christians run to the Temple of Vesta to see Incense offered by Marcellinus: Their Names are recited, which are either almost all African Names, or such as are ridiculous. 'Tis said that 72 were chosen out of them to be Witnesses of this Pope's Sacrilege. The synodical Part of these Acts is no less contrary to the Discipline of that time, than what is said of the Fall of Marcellinus is contrary to the History. 'Tis said, that Marcellinus at first denied his Fault; that the Synod declar'd to him he should be his own Judge; that the Bishops durst not judge him, because it was not lawful for any body to judge the First See. I say nothing of the Impertinencies, which some of the Bishops are made to say, that are unworthy of the Gravity and Simplicity of the Christians of the First Ages. Lastly, he who forg'd these Acts, says, that Diocletian was inform'd of the Condemnation of Marcellinus, when he was at War with the Persians; which yet further discovers that these Acts are not ancient, since the Persian War was ended before the Persecution of Diocletian, from whence it follows, that he who fell into so gross a fault in Chronology, is a modern Author unworthy of any Credit.

Of Cirtha. 305

THE Violence of the Persecution being a little abated in Africk in the Year of Jesus Christ 305, some Bishops of Numidia assembled at the beginning of the Month of May in the City of Cirtha, in the House of one Donatus, because the Churches were not yet restor'd. The occasion of this Synod was the Ordination of a Bishop into the See of this City of Numidia in the room of Paul. The Bishops which were present there were Secundus of Tigisis, Donatus of Masculs, Marinus of Aquæ Tibilitanæ, Donatus of Calama, Purpurius of Limata, Victor of Garbis, Felix of Rotarium, Nabor of Centurio and Secundus the younger. A Bishop call'd Menalius would not be present for fear of being accus'd and convicted of having sacrificed to Idols. These Bishops, who were afterwards the Heads of the Donatists Faction, accus'd one another mutually in this Council, and all of them fearing lest they should be convicted of the Crimes of which they had accus'd one another; they pardon'd one another, referring themselves to the Judgment of God: After which they ordain'd Silvanus Bishop of Cirtha. You have the Acts of this Council in St. Austine in his Third Book against Cresconius, Chap. 27.

Of Alexandria. 306.

IN the Year 306. Peter of Alexandria held a Council, wherein he depoſed Meletius, being convicted of having ſacrificed to Idols. We have not the Acts of this Council, and we know nothing more in particular of it.

Of Alexandria. 306.

Of the Council of Eliberis or Elvira.

Of Eliberis or Elvira, 305.

THE place (a) and time (b) of the Council of Eliberis are very uncertain. Some have thought that this Council was aſſembled in a City of Gallia Narbonenſis; other ſay that this City was in Bætica, and the moſt Learned think that this City Eliberis was the ſame with Granada. As to the time, ſome Authors have placed it at the end of the Third Century, others have remov'd it unto the end of the Fourth, but the moſt probable Opinion is, that it was aſſembled at the beginning of the Fourth Century, before the Councils of Arles and Nice, about the Year 305. The little Order that is obſerved in the Canons of this Council, the great variety of Rules that are to be found in it, and the multitude of Canons about different Matters, make ſome Learned Men think, probably enough, that the Canons attributed to this Council are an ancient Code, or an ancient Collection of the Councils of Spain. However this be, it cannot be doubted, but theſe Canons are very Ancient and very Authentick.

The Diſcipline which they eſtabliſh is very rigorous.

In the 1ſt. Canon they are depriv'd of Communion, i. e. of Abſolution, even at the point of Death, who have voluntarily ſacrificed to Idols after they were baptized.

The 2d. eſtabliſhes the ſame Penalty againſt thoſe, who taking upon them after their Baptiſm, the Office of Prieſts to falſe Gods, were obliged to offer up Sacrifices to Idols by themſelves or others, and who have alſo increaſed their Guilt by Murders or Adulteries.

The 3d. moderates this Penalty to thoſe who have only cauſed profane ſhows to be repreſented, and grants them Communion at the point of Death, provided they put themſelves under Penance, and that they do not afterwards fall into Adultery.

The 4th. is, that if the Catechumens cauſe themſelves to be choſen Prieſts to falſe Gods, and act in profane Shows, their Baptiſm ſhall be delay'd for three Years.

The 5th. impoſes ſeven Years Penance upon a Woman that ſhall beat her Servant-Maid in ſuch a manner, that ſhe dies within three Days after, if the Woman had a deſign to kill her; and five Years Penance if ſhe had no ſuch deſign: She is acquitted if the Maid dies more than three Days after.

In the 6th. Canon it is ordain'd, That Abſolution ſhall be refus'd even at Death, to him who ſhall kill another by treachery.

The 7th is, That thoſe who relapſe into Adultery after they have undergone Penance, ſhall not be received even at Death.

The 8th. ſubjects a Woman to the ſame Penalty, who has forſaken her Husband without cauſe, to marry another.

The 9th declares, that 'tis not lawful for a Woman, tho' ſhe has forſaken her Husband, becauſe of Adultery, to marry another; and that if ſhe does it, ſhe ought not to be admitted to Communion, till he whom ſhe has married be dead, or at leaſt till the extremity of Sickneſs make it neceſſary to grant it her.

Of Eliberis or Elvira, 305.

The 10th. allows Husbands to be baptiz'd who have forſaken their Wives, and Wives who have forſaken their Husbands, for Adultery, while they were Catechumens. But if a Chriſtian Woman marries a Man who has forſaken his Wife without reaſon, the Canon ordains, that the Communion of the Church ſhall be refus'd her, even at the point of Death.

The 11th. ordains, that Baptiſm ſhall be delay'd for the ſpace of five Years to a Catechumeneſs who has married a Husband that had divorc'd his Wife without cauſe.

The 12th Canon denies Communion at death to Women who proſtitute their Daughters.

The 13th. ſubjects to the ſame Penalty the Virgins conſecrated to God, who ſpend their Life in Licentiouſneſs, but it grants Abſolution at the Point of Death to thoſe who do Penance for their Fault.

The 14th. treats Virgins with much moderation who have loſt their Virginity, if they marry thoſe who have abuſed them; for it ordains, that they ſhould be reſtored to Eccleſiaſtical Communion at the End of one Year, without being oblig'd to do Penance; but then it impoſes five Years Penance, if they have had to do with other Men.

The 15th. and 16th. forbid the Faithful to beſtow their Daughters in Marriage upon Pagans, Jews, or Hereticks, how great ſoever the number of Virgins be among Chriſtians; and it ordains, that the Fathers who do it ſhall be ſeparated from Communion for the ſpace of five Years.

The 17th. denies Abſolution even at the Point of Death, to thoſe who give their Daughters in Marriage to the Prieſts of falſe Gods.

The 18th. forbids Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons to leave their Churches to exerciſe Merchandiſe, and go to Fairs; but it allows them to traffick in their own Province, and to ſend their Children, their Friends, and their Servants to trade in Foreign Countries.

The 19th. ordains, that Communion ſhall be refuſed, even at the Point of Death, to Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons who have committed Adultery.

The 20th. declares, that a Clergyman who is diſcovered to take Intereſt, ſhould be depoſed and removed; that the ſame Crime ſhould be pardoned in a Layman if he promiſes to amend it, but if he relapſes he is to be caſt out of the Church.

The 21ſt. Canon is, that if any Inhabitant in a City ſhall be abſent from the Church for three Sundays together, he ſhall be ſeparated from Communion for ſome time, to ſignify that he has been puniſhed for his Fault.

The 22d. declares, that he who has abandoned the Church, to go over to a Sect of Hereticks, ſhall not be received back into the Church again till he has done Penance for ten Years: As for thoſe who were Children when they were entred into an He-

(a) The place] The Name of this Council is very various; Some call it Libertinum, others Elibertinum, others Heberitanum, and ſome Eliberinum; but the more common Name is Eliberitanum, or Illiberitanum. The ancient Geographers mention only Two Cities call'd by this Name, whereof one was in Gallia Narbonenſis, and the other in Bætica. 'Tis thought that the firſt is Perpignan, and the other in all probability is the City of Granada. The Firſt was deſtroy'd in the time of Pliny and Mela, and 'tis no wiſe probable that the Biſhops of Spain ſhould come ſo far to hold a Council. Wherefore it is much more probable that this Council was held at the Spaniſh Elvira i. e. Granada.

(b) The time.] Thoſe who ſaid that this Council was held after the Year 400, affirm'd what is manifeſtly falſe, ſince at that time the enjoining Penance for thoſe who had ſacrific'd to Idols, was not debated: The ſame Reaſon proves that there is no probability that it was aſſembled after the Council of Nice. It ſeems to have been called before that of Arles; but I do not believe that it was called before the Perſecution of Dioclesian. There is more probability, that it was aſſembled when the Perſecution ended in the Weſt, and when Dioclesian had abdicated the Empire in the Year 304.

retical Sect, and return to the Church, the Canon ordains, that they ſhall be received without any delay.

The 23d. declares, that the ordinary Faſts ſhall be obſerved, except in the Months of July and Auguſt, becauſe of the weakneſs of ſome of the Faithful.

The 24th. forbids thoſe to be admitted to ſacred Orders, who have been baptized out of their own Country, becauſe their Life is not known.

The 25th. declares, that Credit ſhall not be given to the Letters of a Confeſſor, but only to Letters of Communion.

The 26th. forbids Faſting on Saturdays.

The 27th. forbids Biſhops and Clergymen to have in their Houſes ſtrange Women.

The 28th. forbids Biſhops to receive Preſents from thoſe that are not in the Communion of the Church.

The 29th. forbids to recite at the Altar the Names of thoſe that are poſſeſs'd, and does not permit them to make any Offering themſelves in the Church.

The 30th. ordains, that the Orders of Subdeacon ſhall not be given to thoſe who have committed Adultery in their Youth, leſt they ſhould riſe to a higher Degree, and that thoſe who have been ordained ſhall be degraded.

The 31ſt. declares, that thoſe may be admitted to Communion who have committed Adultery after Baptiſm, provided they have fulfilled their canonical Penance.

The 32d. declares, that when any Perſons fall ſick, they ought to be received into Eccleſiaſtical Communion by the Biſhop; but yet if the ſickneſs be violent, the Prieſt may grant them Communion, and even the Deacon if the Biſhop command him.

The 33d. Canon preſcribes Celibacy to Prieſts and Deacons.

The 34th. Canon is very obſcure: It declares, that Wax-candles are not to be lighted in the Cœmiteries, becauſe we muſt not diſturb the Spirits of the Saints. Some underſtand by the Spirits of the Saints the Souls of the Dead: I think that it is more natural to underſtand by it, the Repoſe of the Spirits of the Faithful that are alive and may be troubled with a great multitude of Lights in the day-time.

The 35th. redreſſes a dangerous Abuſe; it is ſet down in theſe Words. 'We have thought fit to 'hinder Women from ſpending the Night in the 'Cœmiteries, becauſe oftentimes under pretence of 'praying they commit in ſecret great Crimes.

The 36th. has very much exercis'd Divines. Thus it is expreſſed, 'We would not have Pictures placed 'in Churches, leſt the Object of our Worſhip and 'Adoration ſhould be painted upon the Walls.' Many Explications have been given of this Paſſage, but to me it ſeems better to underſtand it in the plaineſt Senſe, and to confeſs that the Fathers of this Council did not approve the Uſe of Images, no more than that of Wax-candles lighted in full day-light: But theſe Things are Matters of Diſcipline, which may be uſed or not, without doing any Prejudice to the Faith of the Church.

The 37th. Canon permits Baptiſm to be given at the Point of Death to thoſe who are acted by an evil Spirit, and to Catechumens, and does not deprive them of Communion if they be faithful. Provided, adds the Canon, that they do not publickly light Lamps. This Addition is very obſcure, and there is no great neceſſity of explaining it.

The 38th. declares, that a Chriſtian who is neither Penitent nor Bigamiſt, may baptize in a caſe of Neceſſity, thoſe who are on a Journey, being at a great diſtance from a Church, upon condition that he preſent him to the Biſhop if he ſurvive, to be perfected by Impoſition of Hands.

The 39th. ordains, that Impoſition of Hands ſhall not be deny'd to Pagans who deſire it after they are fallen into ſome Diſeaſe, provided they have led an honeſt Life. This Canon muſt be underſtood of that Impoſition of Hands by which Pagans were plac'd in the Rank of Catechumens, which this Council calls making them Chriſtians.

The 40th. forbids Land-lords to allow their Farmers or Receivers what they have given for Idols; and if they do it, it impoſes upon them a Penance of five Years.

The Councils.

The 41ſt. declares, that the Faithful muſt be admoniſhed not to ſuffer Idols in their Houſes.

The 42d. ordains, that thoſe who give in their Names to be entred into the Church, ſhall be baptiz'd two Years after, if they lead a regular Life; unleſs they are obliged to relieve them ſooner upon the account of any dangerous Sickneſs, or that it is judg'd convenient to grant them this Grace ſooner becauſe of the fervor of their Prayers.

The 43. forbids the Celebration of the Feaſt of Whitſunday before Eaſter.

The 44th. allows a Woman to be received who has formerly led a lewd Life, when ſhe is converted, and would be made a Chriſtian, after ſhe has renounc'd her Sins.

The 45th. allows Baptiſm to be given a Catechumen, tho' he has been long abſent from Church.

The 46th. impoſes 10 Years Penance upon one of the Faithful, who has lived long in the practice of the ſame Sin, which it looks upon as an Apoſtacy.

The 47th. ordains, that if one of the Faithful who has a lawful Wife, has committed many Adulteries, fall ſick, and promiſe to commit this Sin no more, Communion ſhall not be deny'd him; but if after his Recovery he relapſe into his Sin, it ſhall never more be granted to him.

In the 48th. it is ordain'd, that the baptiz'd ſhall not put any more Money into the Boxes or Baſons, as was commonly done, leſt it ſhould be thought, that the Prieſt gave for Money what he had freely received. It adds, that not the Prieſts but the Miniſters ſhall waſh the Feet of the baptiz'd.

The 49th. forbids thoſe who poſſeſs an Eſtate in Land, to ſuffer the Fruits of it to be bleſs'd by the Jews.

The 50th. ordains, that thoſe who eat with Jews ſhall be ſeparated from the Church.

The 51ſt. forbids to admit into the Clergy thoſe who return from Hereſy, and pronounces the Sentence of Depoſition againſt ſuch if they are ordain'd.

The 52d. declares thoſe worthy of an Anathema, who publiſh defamatory Libels.

The 53d. declares, that a Perſon excommunicated cannot be received but by the Biſhop who excommunicated him, and forbids all others to receive him into Communion without the conſent of his own Biſhop.

The 54th. ordains, that thoſe Pagans ſhall be ſeparated from the Church for three Years who have violated their Promiſe of Eſpouſals, unleſs one of the Parties contracted be found guilty of ſome Crime which hindred them from Marriage.

The 55th. declares, that they ſhall be received into Communion at the End of two Years who were Prieſts of falſe Gods, who have carried a Crown, but have not ſacrific'd nor laid out any Money to the Honour of Idols.

The 56th. ſeparates from the Church a Pagan Magiſtrate, during the time that he diſcharges his Office.

The 57th. excommunicates for three Years thoſe Chriſtian Women who lend their Garments for a profane ſhow.

The 58th. ordains, that thoſe who bring Letters of Communion ſhall be examined in all the Churches, and chiefly in that where the firſt Epiſcopal Throne is ſettled, that is, in the Metropolitical Church.

The 59th. forbids Chriſtians to aſcend into the Capitol to ſacrifice there, or to ſee Sacrificing there, and impoſes ten Years Penance upon thoſe that fall into this Fault.

The 60th. deprives thoſe of the Title of Martyrs, who are kill'd for overthrowing Idols publickly, becauſe the Goſpel commands us not to do any ſuch thing, and we never read that it was practis'd by the Chriſtians in the times of the Apoſtles.

The 61ſt. impoſes a Penance of five Years upon him him that marries his Wife's Siſter, unleſs the extremity of Sickneſs oblige us to give him the Peace of the Church ſooner.

The 62d. declares, that an Actor of Plays or a Comedian who would be made a Chriſtian, ſhall not be received till he has renounced his Profeſſion.

The 63d. denies Communion even at the Point of Death, to ſuch Women as being guilty of Adultery have murder'd their Infants.

The 64th. treats with the ſame Rigor thoſe Women who have continued all their Life-time in the habitual practice of the Sin of Adultery; but as to thoſe who acknowledg'd their crime before they were ſick, and forſook the Man with whom they had committed this Sin, it grants them Communion after ten Years Penance.

The 65th. declares, that if a Clergy-man knows that his Wife commits Adultery and ſends her not away, he is unworthy of the Communion of the Church even at the Point of Death, leſt it ſhould be thought that thoſe who ought to be a Pattern of a regular Life, ſhow an Example of Licentiouſneſs.

[This Canon is an authentick Evidence of the Marrying of the Clergy of the Church of Spain at this time.]

The 66th. declares, that he who marries his Daughter-in-law ſhall not receive the Communion even at Death.

The 67th. forbids Women that are of the Faithful or Catechumens, to have Footmen or Pages that are beautiful and well-ſhap'd.

The 68th. delays the Baptiſm of a Catechumeneſs to the Hour of Death, who having committed Adultery murder'd her Child.

The 69th. impoſes but Five Years of Penance upon thoſe who have fallen but once into the Sin of Adultery.

The 70th. declares, that if a Woman commit Adultery with the conſent of her Husband, he is unworthy of the Communion at the Point of Death; nevertheleſs if he divorces her he may be received after ten Years Penance.

[By infamous Crimes here is meant abuſing their Bodies with Mankind.]

The 71ſt. denies Communion even at the Point of Death to thoſe who have committed moſt infamous Crimes.

The 72d. declares, that if a Widow commit Adultery, and afterwards marries the ſame Man with whom ſhe had committed this Sin, ſhe ſhall be diſcharg'd for five Years Penance; but if ſhe marry another, ſhe cannot be reconcil'd, even at the Point of Death, and that if he to whom ſhe marries be one of the Faithful, he ſhall be put under Penance for ten Years.

The 73d. denies Communion, even at the Point of Death, to thoſe who have been the cauſe of the Condemnation or Death of any Man by their falſe Accuſations, and impoſes five Years Penance if the Matter be of leſs conſequence.

The Councils.

The 74th ordains, that a falſe Witneſs ſhall be puniſh'd proportionably to the greatneſs of the Crime of which he teſtified falſly: That if the Crime did not deſerve Death; and he proves, that he gave Teſtimony with reluctancy, and that he continued long before he was willing to ſay any thing, he ſhall be acquitted for two Years of Penance: But if he does not prove that he was conſtrain'd to give this falſe Teſtimony, he ſhall not be receiv'd into the Communion of the Church till five Years after.

The 75th. deprives thoſe of Communion, even at the Point of Death, who have falſly accus'd a Biſhop, a Prieſt, or a Deacon.

The 76th. ordains, that if a Deacon being guilty of a Crime ſuffers himſelf to be ordain'd, he ſhall be put under Penance for three Years, if the Crime be diſcover'd by his own Confeſſion, and five Years if it be detected by the Teſtimony of another.

The 77th declares, that if a Deacon who governs a People, baptize any Catechumens without a Biſhop or without a Prieſt, the Biſhop ought to conſummate, as one may ſay, the Baptiſm by his Benediction; but if they die before this be done, they may be ſaved by the Faith which they had.

The 78th. impoſes upon him who commits Adultery with a Pagan or Jewiſh Woman, a Penance of three Years, if he himſelf confeſs his Sin, and one of five Years, if he be convicted of it.

The 79th. forbids playing at Games of Chance, and declares that if any of the Faithful make profeſſion of playing, he ſhall be depriv'd of Communion; but if he forſakes this Cuſtom he may be reconciled at the End of one Year.

The 80th. ordains, that Freed-men whoſe Patrons are ſecular Men, ſhall not be ſuffer'd to enter into the Clergy.

The laſt Canon forbids Women to write to Laymen in their own Names. This Canon is difficult enough, Albaſpineus underſtands it of Eccleſiaſtical Letters. I ſhould more willingly underſtand it of Familiar Letters.

I know very well that there are many Difficulties about the true Senſe of many of theſe Canons. I have endeavour'd to explain them in the Extract which I made out of them, wherein I follow'd that Senſe which appear'd to me moſt natural, and moſt agreeable to the Genius of the Ancients. Thoſe that would inform themſelves more fully in this Matter, may read the Notes of Albaſpineus, and the great Commentary of Mendoza, which contains many things that are no-wiſe uſeful for underſtanding theſe Canons; which are not ſo difficult when they are read without prejudice to one that underſtands ſomething of the ancient Diſcipline.

Of the Pretended Council of Carthage againſt Cæcilian.

Of Carthage. 311.

After the death of Menſurius Biſhop of Carthage, ſeveral Perſons who had a mind to the Biſhoprick of this City, aſſembled the neighbouring Biſhops, to ordain a Biſhop of Carthage, without citing thither the Biſhops of Numidia. The deſign of thoſe Perſons did not ſucceed according to their deſires, for not one of them was choſen Biſhop, and there was plac'd in the room of Menſurius, Cæcilian Archdeacon of Carthage, who was ordain'd by Felix Biſhop of Aptungis. The Biſhops of Numidia being offended becauſe they were not call'd to the Ordination of Cæcilian, and being ſollicited by ſome of his Enemies, came to Carthage in the year 311, to the number of 70. They durſt not enter into the Church where Cæcilian was, but being receiv'd by thoſe who call'd them, they cited him to come before them and defend himſelf. This Biſhop without being daunted anſwer'd them boldly, If there be any Proofs againſt me, let my Accuſer appear and produce them. But his Enemies having nothing perſonal to object againſt him, accus'd Felix of Aptungis who had ordain'd him, and ſaid that this Biſhop having been a Traditor could not give a valid Ordination, and conſequently Cæcilian was not then a Biſhop. Cæcilian either becauſe he miſtruſted the innocence of Felix, or becauſe he would not enter upon this Controverſy, made anſwer to his Enemies: That if Felix had not conferr'd upon him Epiſcopal Orders, they might ordain him a-new, as if he had been ſtill a Deacon. Purpurius Biſhop of Limata, a cunning and dextrous Man, adviſ'd thoſe of his Party, to make a ſhow of accepting this Propoſition, and when Cæcilian ſhould come to receive Ordination, then to put him under Penance inſtead of laying hands on him to ordain him Biſhop. This Advice had been put in Execution, if Cæcilian had not been detain'd by his Friends, who would not ſuffer him to truſt himſelf to the Fury of his Enemies. Then the Biſhops of Numidia condemn'd him, tho' abſent, and ordain'd Majorinus in his room. They alledg'd three Reaſons for the

Depoſition

The Councils.

Depoſition of Cæcilian. The firſt was, becauſe he would not appear before the Council. The ſecond, becauſe he had been ordain'd by Traditors. The third, becauſe being Archdeacon he had hindred, ſay they, the carrying of Victuals to the Confeſſors of Jeſus Chriſt who were in priſon. We have only one Article pronounc'd by the 70 Biſhops produc'd by St. Auſtine in his Book againſt Fulgentius the Donatiſt. It is expreſs'd in theſe Words, by the Biſhop who pronounc'd it call'd Marcianus: Our Lord has ſaid in the Goſpel, I am the true Vine, and my Father is the Husbandman; he will cut off and caſt forth every Branch that is in me, and beareth not fruit. And therefore ſince it is ſaid, That the Branch which beareth not Fruit, ſhould be caſt forth, we may truly ſay, That neither Traditors nor Idolaters, nor thoſe who are Schiſmatically ordain'd by Traditors can continue in the Church of God, unleſs they be reconciled by Penance, after they have acknowledged and bewailed their Sin. Wherefore Cæcilian being Schiſmatically ordain'd by Traditors, ought to be excommunicated. After the Biſhops had thus pronounc'd ſeverally their Sentences againſt Cæcilian, and ordain'd Majorinus, they ſent a circular Letter to all the Biſhops of Africa, exhorting them to ſeparate themſelves from the Communion of Cæcilian: But notwithſtanding this Letter, Cæcilian continued in Communion with a great part of the Biſhops of Africa, and with all the other Biſhops of the World, who declar'd themſelves in his favour, againſt the Numidians who made the Schiſm, and were call'd Donatiſts. Thus Cæcilian continued in his See, notwithſtanding the Judgment of this Synod, and did not ſo much as aſſemble a Council to abſolve himſelf from this Sentence, believing himſelf ſufficiently ſecur'd againſt the conſpiracy of his Enemies, ſays St. Auſtine, by the Communion of the Roman Church, and of all the other Churches beyond the Sea, from whom he received, and to whom he wrote Letters of Communion. What we have ſaid of this Council is taken out of Optatus and St. Auſtine.

The Councils.

Of the Council of Rome.

Of Rome. 313.

CONſtantine becoming Maſter of Africk, after he had conquered the Tyrant Maxentius, wrote to Anulinus Proconſul of Africk, to maintain the Party of Cæcilian, and to endeavour to re-eſtabliſh Peace in the Church of Africk. This wiſe Magiſtrate ſent for Cæcilian and his Adverſaries, read to them the Emperor's Letter, and exhorted them to be reconcil'd to one another: But ſome Days after, thoſe of Majorinus's Party preſented to him two Memorials; one was intitled, A Manifeſto of Cæcilian's Crimes, preſented by Majorinus's Party: And the other was a Petition, wherein they prayed that ſome Biſhops of Gaul might be given them for Judges. Thoſe who preſented theſe two Papers to Anulinus, earneſtly prayed him to ſend them to the Emperor. He did ſo, and the Emperor having regard to their Petition, gave them for Judges, Miltiades Biſhop of Rome, together with Rheticius Biſhop of Autun, Marinus Biſhop of Arles, and Maternus Biſhop of Cologne. Miltiades joyn'd to theſe four, fifteen Biſhops of Italy, and theſe nineteen Biſhops aſſembled in the City of Rome in the year 313, and undertook to judge the cauſe of Cæcilian. The firſt Day that they aſſembled, Majorinus's Party preſented to the Council a Memorial of the Crimes, whereof they accus'd Cæcilian: But the Judges having deſir'd them to produce their Accuſers and Witneſſes, they introduc'd ſome who were oblig'd to withdraw immediately, becauſe they declar'd, that they had nothing to ſay againſt Cæcilian. He for his part accus'd Donatus of having made a Schiſm at Carthage, and urged him to preſent before the Council, the Witneſſes and Accuſers which he had brought. Donatus promiſed that he would preſent them, and in the mean time was convicted of having re-baptiz'd, and re-ordain'd. The ſecond Day a new Memorial was given in againſt Cæcilian, but ſufficient Evidence could not be produc'd. The Judgment of the ſeventy Biſhops of Numidia was alledg'd, for which the Judges had no great reſpect. The third Day, the whole cauſe was determined, Donatus was condemn'd as being convicted of having re-baptiz'd, and laid his Hands upon Biſhops who were already ordain'd: And Cæcilian was abſolv'd by the Sentence of all the Biſhops, and even by the ſuffrage of Miltiades who concluded the Deciſion. The Council having thus judg'd the cauſe of Cæcilian and Donatus, endeavour'd to reſtore Peace among the other Biſhops, by ordering that in thoſe places where there had been a Biſhop of each Party, he who had been ordain'd firſt ſhould continue Biſhop, and care ſhould be taken to give another Biſhoprick to the other. Letters of Communion were alſo offer'd to be ſent to the Biſhops of Majorinus's Party, provided they would be reconcil'd. At laſt, the Biſhops wrote to Conſtantine, inform'd him of their Deciſion, and aſſur'd him, that they had given their Judgment according to Juſtice and Equity. The Acts of this Council were extant in St. Auſtine's time, and they were alſo produced in the Conference of Carthage, but now they are loſt. We have taken what we have ſaid, out of Optatus in Book Firſt, and out of St. Auſtine in his Abridgment of the Conference on the third Day, in Ch. 11. of his Letter 162, now the 43d. and of Letter 50. now the 185.

Of Rome. 313.

Of Arles. 314.

THE Biſhops of Majorinus's Party having loſt their Cauſe in the Council of Rome, addreſs'd themſelves to the Emperor, and complain'd of the Judgment which was given at Rome, alledging that their Judges did not hear all that they had to ſay. The Emperor deſiring they might be ſolemnly judg'd, that ſo they ſhould have nothing to reply, call'd (a) a Council in the year 314 in the City of Arles. This Council was compoſed of 33 weſtern Biſhops (b), with ſome Prieſts and ſome Deacons.

Of Arles. 314.

(a) Call'd.] 'Tis certain that the Emperor call'd this Synod. We have in Euſeb. B. X. of his Hiſt. Ch. 5. the Letter which he wrote to Chreſtus Biſhop of Syracuſe, wherein he commands him to be preſent at this Council of Arles; he wrote of it likewiſe to all the other Biſhops. Some have ſaid that the Donatiſts appeal'd to a Council after the Deciſion of Rome, but St. Auſtine who had ſtudied this Hiſtory exactly, ſays in an infinite number of places, that they complained only of the Judgment given at Rome, but did not appeal till after the Deciſion of the Council of Arles.

(b) Compoſed of 33 weſtern Biſhops.] Baronius thought that this Council conſiſted of 200 Biſhops, which he grounded upon a Paſſage of St. Auſtine in his Book againſt the Epiſtle of Parmenianus Ch. 5. but he miſunderſtood that Paſſage, for there he does not ſpeak of the Council of Arles, but of the Council of Rome, which conſiſted only of 19 Biſhops, and not of 200, as they are reckon'd in the Text of St. Auſtine according to the common Editions; but this place has been reſtored in the laſt Edition by a Manuſcript of the Vatican Library, and inſtead of reading as it was, Ut ducentos Judices apud quos victi ſunt, victis litigatoribus credant eſſe poſtponendos, it is now thus reſtored, ut contra Judices, apud quos victi ſunt, victis litigatoribus credant, &c. There are but 33 Names at the head of the Council's Letter; but of theſe 33 there are 4 Prieſts, and one Deacon, and ſix Exorciſts. They endeavour to prove that there was a greater number of Biſhops at this Council, becauſe Conſtantine in his Letter to Chreſtus, and the ſecond Council of Arles teſtifie, That there were Biſhops in it from all Parts of the World: But theſe 19 Biſhops are found to be from all Parts of the Weſt, and ſo it is not neceſſary to admit a greater number of them, to verify what is ſaid by Conſtantine and the Fathers of the ſecond Council of Arles. Ado ſays, that 600 Biſhops were preſent at this Council; but this is no-wiſe probable.

The Councils.

Marinus Biſhop of Arles preſided there; the Legates of Pope Sylveſter were preſent (c), but that the Emperor was not there (d). The Council heard the Accuſations which were form'd againſt Cæcilian; but when his Accuſers could not prove him guilty of the Crimes whereof they accuſed him, they were rejected or condemned by the Council. After this cauſe was judged, the Biſhops thought it their Duty, ſince they were aſſembled, to make ſome Rules concerning the Diſcipline of the Church; and they made 22 Canons.

In the 1ſt. they ordain, that the Feaſt of Eaſter ſhould be celebrated on the ſame Sunday in all the Churches of the World, and that the Biſhop of Rome ſhould give Notice of the Day to the Churches according to Cuſtom.

In the 2d. they enjoyn Miniſters to continue in the Churches where they were ordain'd.

In the 3d. they excommunicate thoſe who make uſe of Arms in a time of Peace.

In the 4th. they ordain, that thoſe who run Races in the Cirque, ſhall be ſeparated from the Communion while they follow that Employment.

In the 5th. they make the ſame Regulation for thoſe who act upon the Theatre.

In the 6th. they ordain, that Impoſition of Hands ſhall be given to thoſe who having fallen ſick, declare, that they deſire to believe in Jeſus Chriſt.

In the 7th. they permit the Faithful to enter upon Offices, without being deprived of the Communion of the Church; but upon condition that the Biſhop of the place where they ſhall take an Office, ſhall ſuperintend their Conduct, and that if they do any thing contrary to the Diſcipline of the Church, they ſhall be ſeparated from his Communion.

The 8th. determines the famous Queſtion about the Re-baptization of Hereticks, and ordains concerning the Africans, who had always re-baptized them, that if any one leave a Hereſy and return to the Church, he ſhall be ask'd concerning the Creed, and if it be known that he was baptized in the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, Impoſition of Hands only ſhall be given him that he may receive the Holy Spirit; but if he does not acknowledge the Trinity, he ſhall be re-baptized.

The 9th. declares, that in order to their being received into Communion in a Foreign Church, they ſhould not any longer carry Letters of Recommendation from the Confeſſors, but Letters of Communion from their Biſhop.

In the 10th. they ſay, that thoſe who find their Wives in the Act of Adultery muſt be counſelled not to marry others, while they are living, tho' the Laws permit them to do it.

The Councils.

In the 11th. they ſeparate for ſome time from the Communion of the Church the Chriſtian Virgins that marry Infidels.

In the 12th they excommunicate the Clergy that are Uſurers.

In the 13th. they ordain, that thoſe ſhall be turned out of the Clergy, who ſhall be proved by the publick Acts to have delivered up the Holy Scriptures; but those who they had ordained ſhall continue in their Station. They forbid Men to hearken to theſe Accuſations, unleſs they be proved by the publick Acts.

In the 14th. they ſeparate from the Communion until the point of Death, thoſe who falſly accuſe their Brethren.

In the 15th. they ſay, that the Deacons ſhould not offer, as they did in many places.

In the 16th. they ordain, that thoſe who are ſeparated from the Communion, ſhall be reſtored no where elſe, but in the place where they were excommunicated.

The 17th. ordains, that one Biſhop ſhall not deſpiſe the Judgment of another. This is rather a conſequence of the preceding Canon, than a Canon by it ſelf.

The 18th. enjoyns Deacons in Cities to reverence the Prieſts.

The 19th. grants to Foreign Biſhops the Power of celebrating the Oblation.

In the 20th. the Biſhops of this Council forbid one Biſhop alone to ordain another Biſhop; they would have ſeven of them meet if it be poſſible, but if this cannot be done, they do abſolutely forbid any one to ordain, unleſs he has three Biſhops with him.

In the 21ſt. they forbid Prieſts and Deacons, under pain of Depoſition to relinquiſh the Churches in which they were fix'd by their Ordination.

In the 22d. they declare, that Communion is not to be given to thoſe who having apoſtatized, continue a long time out of the Church without doing Penance, waiting till they fall ſick to ask Communion; unleſs they recover their Health, and give Signs of a ſincere Repentance.

At laſt the Biſhops of this Council wrote to St. Sylveſter Biſhop of Rome, as the chief Biſhop of the World, an Account of every thing that they had ordain'd, that he might publiſh theſe Canons throughout the Catholick Church. They aſſure him in this Letter, that they were very ſorry, that he could not be preſent himſelf in Perſon at this Council, and they pray him to publiſh their Deciſions over all the World.

(c) Marinus Biſhop of Arles preſided there, &c.] His Name is at the head of the Biſhops, named at the beginning of the Epiſtle to St. Sylveſter, before thoſe of the Pope's Legates.

(d) That the Emperor was not there.] Some Authors have ſaid that he was, but they are miſtaken; for it appears by the Letter of Conſtantine written after the Synod, that he was not, and the Donatiſts would not have appeal'd to his Judgment, if he had been preſent at the Sentence given by the Synod and approved it.

Of the Councils of Ancyra and Neo-Cæſarea.

Of Ancyra and Neo-Cæſarea. 314.

THE Councils of Ancyra and Neo-Cæſarea, were held much about the ſame time as the Council of Arles. We know nothing of the Hiſtory, nor particular Circumſtances of theſe two Councils; we have only their Canons, which the ancient Church look'd upon as Rules that ought to be obſerv'd every where, ſince they have been put into the Code of the Canons of the univerſal Church.

There are 25 Canons of the Council of Ancyra. The firſt preſerves the Honour of the Prieſthood to thoſe Biſhops, who having ſacrificed to Idols repented of their Fault, and afterwards ſuffered for the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt. But it forbids them to exerciſe any part of the Sacerdotal Function, and will not ſo much as allow them to make the Offering or preach. The ſecond uſes the ſame moderation to Deacons; but it permits Biſhops to ſhow them more Favour if they think it convenient.

In the 3d. Canon it is ordain'd, that thoſe who have been made to offer Incenſe or to eat of Meats ſacrific'd to Idols, by Force and Violence, are not at all guilty, that they ought to be admitted to Communion, and that they may even be promoted to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, provided they have teſtified their ſorrow for what happen'd to them: But for thoſe who were preſent at the Feaſts made to the Honour of Idols with mirth and jollity, it impoſes upon them five years Penance, one year in the Rank of Hearers, two years in the Rank of Supplicants, and two years in the number of thoſe that are preſent only at the Prayers. Whereas thoſe who were preſent in mourning Apparel, and who lamented during the time of the Feaſt, if they did eat of the profane Meat, it places them in the Rank of Supplicants or proſtrate Penitents for three years, and afterwards it would have them receiv'd without having any ſhare in the Oblation; and if they did not eat at all, it leaves them only two years in the Rank of the proſtrate Penitents, and permits them to partake of the Sacraments at the End of the third year. Nevertheleſs less it gives power to the Bishops to shorten or lengthen the time of Penance according to the behaviour of the Penitents.

The 6th. concerns those who have sacrific'd to Idols, fearing Torments or the loss of their Goods, and who desire to be admitted to do Penance. The Synod orders, that they should be among the number of Hearers till Easter-day, that afterwards they should be three Years Supplicants or Prostrate, and then they should be present at the Prayers, which is call'd Communicating without partaking of the Oblation. It excepts however the case of the danger of Death, in which it orders, that they should be receiv'd according to the Law made about it.

The 7th. imposes two Years Penance upon those who were present at the Feasts made in Honour of the Idols, but carried their own Meat, intending not to eat of that which was there presented.

The 8th. imposes seven Years Penance upon those who sacrific'd several times; and the 9th. imposes ten Years Penance upon those who forc'd their Brethren to do it.

The 10th Canon concerns the Celibacy of Deacons. The Council there ordains, that if they declared at the time of their Ordination, that they would marry, they shall not be depriv'd of their Function of they did marry; but if they were ordain'd without making this declaration, and afterwards marry'd they should be oblig'd to quit their Employment.

The 11th. ordains, that if Maids contracted happen to be carried away by others, than those to whom they were promised, they shall be restored to them again whatever violence they have suffered.

The 12th. declares, that those may be ordain'd who have sacrific'd to Idols before they were baptiz'd, because they were purified from this Sin by Baptism.

The 13th. Canon is about Suffragan Bishops or Chorepiscopi. 'Tis as follows in the Greek Text: 'Tis not lawful for Suffragan Bishops to ordain Priests or Deacons, nor for the City Presbyters in another Parish without the permission of their Bishop. 'Tis plain that this Canon is imperfect; and that something must be supplied to make it sense: For what mean these Words, Nor to the City Presbyters &c. Had Priests ever power to ordain other Priests in their own Churches? Had they ever permission to do it out of their own Churches by the Bishops Letters? Why should not the Suffragans who were above the Priests have the same power? There must be something added: See what Dionysius Exiguus has added in his Version, No more is it lawful for Priests to do any thing in the Diocess, without the permission of the Bishop in writing. This Addition is found in the ancient Code of the Roman Church, published by Quesnellus, and in the Version of Isidore; and Justellus has restor'd it in the Greek Text of the Code of the Universal Church.

The 14th. condemns the Superstition of some Clergymen who would not eat Meat. The Synod ordains, that if they continued in this Superstition, and would not eat Herbs boil'd with Meat, they should be depriv'd of their Ecclesiastical Function.

The 15th. declares, that if Priests sell any thing belonging to the Church, while it has not a Bishop, it shall be in the power of the Bishop who is chosen, either to make void the Bargain, or to take the price of the thing that is sold.

The 16th. and 17th. impose long Penances upon those who have committed Crimes contrary to Nature.

The 18th. forbids Bishops who cannot be receiv'd into their own Bishopricks to invade those of others, and allows them only to keep the rank of other Presbyters; of which Honour it ordains that they shall be depriv'd if they stir up Sedition against the Bishop of the place.

The 19th. subjects those Virgins to the same punishment with Bigamists, who violate the Profession that they have made, and forbids them to dwell with Strangers as if they were their Sisters.

The Councils.

The 20th. imposes Seven Years Penance for Adultery.

In the 21st. the Synod observes, that the ancient Canons delay'd the Absolution of those Women till death, who having committed the Sin of Adultery murder'd their Infants; but to mitigate this Punishment, it imposes upon them only ten Years Penance.

The 22d. delayeth the Absolution of those till the Point of death who have committed wilful Murder, and till then it places them in the rank of Prostrate Penitents.

The 23. imposes Seven Years of Penance for Manslaughter.

The 24th. subjects those to a Penance of Five Years who meddle with Divination and practise superstitious Actions.

The last is about a particular Case. A Man had defil'd the Sister of her to whom he was contracted, and afterwards married this last; her Sister hang'd her self for madness. The Synod ordains, that all those who were Complices to these Crimes shall be put under Penance for the space of ten Years.

These Canons are sign'd by 18 Bishops of the Dioceses of Asia, of Pontus, and of the East. Vitalis Bishop of Antioch is the First among these Bishops. 'Tis certain that he held the See of the Church of Antioch from the Year 311, until the Year 319. After him there is the Name of Agricolaus Bishop of Cæsarea in Palæstine: But Eusebius makes no mention of this Bishop, and he could be but a very little time Bishop of that Church. Marcellus of Ancyra who is the third, is famous enough in History. Some think that Basil of Amasea suffer'd Martyrdom under Licinius, and St. Jerome affirms it in his Chronicon: Yet Philostorgius and St. Athanasius reckon him among those Bishops who were present at the Council of Nice. The same St. Athanasius mentions Lupus of Tarsus, and Longinus of Neocæsarea. There is mention made of Leontius of Cæsarea in Cappadocia in the Life of St. Gregory Nazianzen, where 'tis said, that 'twas he who baptiz'd Gregory of Pisa in the time of the Nicene Council. The others are less known.

The Council of Neocæsarea made Fifteen Canons about the Discipline of the Church.

The 1st. is, that if a Priest marries after he has been ordain'd, he ought to be degraded; and if he commit Fornication or Adultery he ought to be punished more rigorously, and put under Penance.

The 2d. is, that if a Woman marry Two Brothers, she ought to be excluded from the Communion of the Church till the end of her Life: but at the Point of Death she shall be absolved, provided she promises to break the Marriage. For if the Husband or the Wife die without being parted, the surviving Person can very hardly be admitted to Penance.

The 3d. is, that the time of the Penance of those who marry often is regulated by the Canons, but it may be shortned proportionably to the Conversion of the Penitent, and the fervour of his Penance.

The 4th. is, that he who having a desire to commit Sin with a Woman, and did not accomplish it, seems to have been sav'd by the Grace of God.

The 5th. is, that if a Catechumen who is in the rank of those who pray with the Faithful, fall into Sin, he must be plac'd in the rank of Hearers, and if he continue to sin, he is to be totally turn'd out of the Church.

The 6th. commands those Women to be baptized who are ready to lie in.

The 7th. forbids Priests to be present at the Marriage of Bigamists.

The 8th declares that he cannot be admitted into Holy Orders, whose Wife has been convicted of Adultery, and that if a Clergy-man's Wife commit Adultery, he ought to divorce her, upon pain of being deprived of his Ministry if he do not.

The Councils.

The 9th. is, that if a Prieſt who has committed the Sin of the Fleſh before he was ordain'd confeſs his Crime, he ought no more to offer, but he ſhall enjoy all his other Rights; for as to other Sins, 'tis thought, that they are pardoned by the Impoſition of Hands: But if he does not confeſs this Fault and cannot be convicted of it, he ſhall be left to his own Conſcience.

The 10th. is, that a Deacon who ſhall commit the ſame Crime before his Ordination, ſhall be plac'd in the rank of the other Miniſters.

The 11th. forbids to give the Order of Prieſthood to thoſe Perſons who are under thirty Years of Age, tho' they have well deſerved, becauſe our Lord was baptized, and begun to preach at that Age.

The 12th. is, that thoſe who have been baptized, in their Sickneſs can never be ordain'd Prieſts, becauſe they ſeem to have embrac'd the Faith only through neceſſity, unleſs this Favour be afterwards granted them upon the account of their Faith and Zeal, and that there be but few Perſons who can be ordain'd.

The Councils.

The 13th. forbids the Prieſts in the Country to make the Oblation in the preſence of the Biſhop, or of the Prieſts of Cities, and does not allow them ſo much as to diſtribute the Bread of the Euchariſt or to give the Cup, but it permits them to do both the one and the other in the abſence of the Biſhop, and the City-Presbyters.

The 14th. declares that Suffragans repreſent the 70 Diſciples, and ſo they are look'd upon as the Brethren of the Biſhops, and have the Honour of making the Oblation.

The laſt ordains, that there ſhould be but Seven Deacons in each City how great ſoever it be. Some of the Biſhops who were at the Council of Ancyra, ſubſcribed to this. Vitalis of Antioch preſided there as well as at the Council of Ancyra. Which ſhows that theſe two Councils were held after the Year 311, and before the Year 319.

Of the Firſt of Alexandria, againſt Arius. 322

SOme time after, Arius began to publiſh his Impiety, Alexander Biſhop of Alexandria, held a Council of near a 100 Biſhops of Egypt, wherein he excommunicated Arius and his Followers. This Council was held in 322.

Of the pretended Council of Bithynia for Arius

Of Bithynia, for Arius. 323.

Euſebius of Nicomedia, and the other Biſhops who protected Arius againſt Alexander, held a Council the next Year in Bithynia, wherein they declare Arius Orthodox, and worthy of the Communion of the Church. Sozomen mentions this Council B. III. Ch. 15. of his Hiſtory.

Of Bithynia, for Arius, 323.

Of the Second Council of Alexandria againſt Arius, held in the preſence of Hoſius.

Of the Second of Alexandria, againſt Arius, 324.

Hoſius being ſent to Alexandria from the Emperor, to compoſe the Differences which troubled the Churches of Egypt, held a Council in that City which the Clergy of Marœotis, in a Proteſtation produced by St. Athanaſius, call an Oecumenical Council. It is not known what was determined in this Council. 'Tis probable that the Wiſe Biſhop of Corduba did what he could to reconcile Mens minds, and not being able to compaſs his Deſign, he would decide nothing. Socrates in B. III. Ch. 7. of his Hiſtory, teſtifies, that in this Council the Terms of Subſtance and Hypoſtaſis were treated of, in oppoſition to Sabellius: And we learn from the Proteſtation of the Clergy of Marœotis, which we juſt now cited, that Colluthus a pretended Biſhop was degraded in this Council, and the Ordinations which he made were annull'd. Philoſtorgius ſays, that Alexander of Alexandria coming at this time to Nicomedia, and having ſpoken to Hoſius, cauſed the Conſubſtantiality of the Word to be determined by a Synodal Sentence. But we have no other Author who mentions this Judgment, neither is there any probability that it was given.

Of the Second of Alexandria, againſt Arius, 324.

Of Nice, 325.

Conſtantine ſeeing that he had laboured in vain to allay the Diſputes which divided the Church, thought it would be the moſt ready and effectual means to reſtore Peace, to call a numerous Synod compos'd of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops. This Council was call'd Oecumenical, i. e. a Council of the whole World, or the whole Earth, becauſe it was called together from all Parts of the Roman Empire, to which the Title of the World, or the Earth was given, and which did almoſt include the Catholick Church. This Council was aſſembled by the Order of the Emperor at Nice (a), a City of Bithynia, about the Month of July in the Year 325 (b), in the Second Year of Conſtantine's Reign (c). St. Sylveſter was then Biſhop of Rome, who ſent thither Victor and Vincentius his Legates. 'Tis commonly held that this Council conſiſted of 318 Biſhops; but thoſe who were preſent at it do not preciſely determine this number (d), but ſay only that there were about 300 Biſhops. 'Tis not certainly known, who

III. of the Life of Conſtantine Ch. 6. ſays, That the Council of Nice was aſſembled by Order of the Emperor; and the Biſhops of this Council in their Letter to the Egyptians, ſay, That they were ſummon'd to meet by the Emperor's Letters. Conſtantine ſays the ſame thing, all the Ancients are agreed in it.

(b) In the Year 325.] Socrates aſſures us, That this Council was aſſembled at this time, and it could not be aſſembled ſooner nor later.

(d) Thoſe who were preſent at it do not preciſely determine this number.] Euſebius B. III. of the Life of Conſtantine, ſays, that there were at the Council of Nice more than 250 Biſhops. Euſtathius ſays, that there were to the number of 270, or thereabouts. St. Athanaſius in his Book of the Decrees of the Council of Nice, and in his Epiſtle to the Monks, ſays, that they were about 300; yet the ſame St. Athanaſius in his Letter to the Africans, St. Hilary in his Book of Synods, Ruſinus, St. Ambroſe, St. Epiphanius, &c. call the Council of Nice, a Council of 318 Biſhops. Socrates, Sozomen and Marius Mercator, do not reckon preciſely the ſame number, but they do not much differ from it.

The Councils.

preſided in this Council, but 'tis very probable that it was Hoſius (e), who held the chief Place there in his own Name, becauſe he had already taken cognizance of this Affair, and was much eſteemed by the Emperor who was there preſent. The Aſſembly was held in a Hall in his Palace (f). 'Tis ſaid that the Biſhops preſented Petitions to him, wherein they accuſed one another, and that he burnt them all without reading them: 'Tis alſo ſaid, that many Philoſophers came to Nice to oppoſe the Chriſtian Religion, and that they were confounded by one ſimple Biſhop: But theſe two Stories are not very certain. But 'tis certain that they minded very cloſely the Cauſe for which they were aſſembled, which was the Hereſy of Arius. St. Athanaſius Deacon of Alexandria, and ſome others, diſputed ſtoutly againſt him. When the Day was come that this great Affair ſhould be determined, one of the Biſhops made a Harangue to the Emperor, and afterwards they begun to enter upon the Buſineſs. Arius having explained his Opinions, was condemned with an unanimous conſent. After this Euſebius of Cæſarea preſented a Confeſſion of Faith, but the Council finding that it did not expreſly enough reject the Error of the Arians, urged the Biſhops who favoured this Heretick to make a clear Profeſſion of the Divinity of the Son of God; and when the Council ſaw that all the Terms which were uſed to dignify the Divinity of the Son of God were eluded by theſe Biſhops by far-fetch'd Explications, the Council was forced, for excluding all kind of Ambiguity to ſay, that the Son of God was Conſubſtantial to his Father. This Word was the ſubject of a great Diſpute among the Biſhops, which was allay'd by the Prudence of the Emperor, who made them all agree in the Senſe of this Word. And thus in the Confeſſion of Faith, or in the Creed made by this Council, Profeſſion is made, Of believing in one only God, the Creator of all things, viſible and inviſible, and in one only Lord Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God, begotten of the Father, the only Son of the Subſtance of the Father, God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God, begotten not made, Conſubſtantial to his Father, by whom all things were made in Heaven and on Earth, who deſcended for us Men and for our Salvation, who was incarnate and made Man, who ſuffered, and roſe again, and aſcended into Heaven, who ſhall come to judge the quick and the dead: And in the Holy Spirit. After this Creed followed an Anathema againſt thoſe who ſhould ſay, That there was a time when the Son of God was not, or that he was not before he was begotten, or that he was created of nothing, or that he was of another Subſtance and another Eſſence, or that he was created and ſubject to Change. All the Biſhops, except Secundus of Ptolemais, and Theonas of Marmarica, ſigned this Confeſſion of Faith (g), Euſebius of Cæſarea refus'd to ſign it at firſt, but he did it the next Day. After this Arius, Secundus and Theonas were condemned in the Council (h), and a Book of the Firſt, intitled Thalia, was proſcrib'd.

The Council having thus judged the Arians with rigor, treated the Meletians with more moderation. It permitted Meletius to continue in the City, and to retain the name of Biſhop, and the Honour annexed to that Office; but it abſolutely forbad him to ordain any body: It preſerved alſo the Rank, Honour and Office of thoſe whom he had ordained, provided nevertheleſs that they ſhould be confirmed by a more ſacred Impoſition of Hands, which is a kind of Re-ordination (i); that they ſhould be inferior to thoſe who had been ordain'd by Alexander, and that they ſhould have no hand in the Election of Biſhops. Nevertheleſs it permits the People and the Clergy to chooſe them Biſhops, if they were found worthy of it, provided that the Biſhop of Alexandria approve this Election. Laſt of all, the Council made a Decree concerning the celebration of Eaſter, and ordained that this Feaſt ſhould be celebrated only on the Sunday. Conſtantine wrote a general Letter to the whole Church, to acquaint them with the Deciſions of this Council, and the Biſhops wrote a Letter particularly to the Chriſtians of Egypt, wherein they inform them exactly of what had been ordained about the cauſe of the Arians and Meletians, and about the celebration of Eaſter.

The Councils.

St. Ambroſe indeed ſeems to intimate that this Council made a Paſchal Cycle; but theſe Words muſt be underſtood as meaning only, that the Determination of the Council gave occaſion to make uſe of Cycles. St. Leo adds in Ep. 64. that the Council gave order to the Biſhop of Alexandria to give notice every year to the Biſhop of Rome of Eaſter-day, that he might publiſh it to all the Churches of the World: But if the Council had made this Order, they would have ſignified it in their Letter to the Egyptians, wherein they ſpeak favourably of Alexander and his Church.

The Council of Nice did not only determine the Differences which troubled the Church by its Deciſions, but alſo made Rules concerning the Diſcipline of the Church. Theſe Rules, which are call'd Canons, are in number twenty, and there never were more Genuine (k), tho' ſome modern Authors have added many more.

The firſt Canon excludes from ſacred Orders, thoſe that made themſelves Eunuchs, but not thoſe who became ſo by Sickneſs, or by the Cruelty of Barbarians.

The 2d. forbids to advance thoſe Perſons to the Orders of Prieſt or Biſhop, who were lately baptiz'd, and ordains that thoſe who ſhall be convicted of any Crime, ſhall be depriv'd of their Eccleſiaſtical Functions.

The third forbids Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, and other Clergy-men to keep Women in the Houſe with them; yet it excepts Mothers, Siſters, and other Perſons, of whom there can be no bad ſuſpicion.

The 4th. ordains, that a Biſhop ſhould be ordain'd by all the Biſhops of the Province, if it can be done; but if it be too difficult to aſſemble them all, either

(e) 'Tis not certainly known who preſided in this Council, but 'tis probable that it was Hoſius.] St. Athanaſius in his ſecond Apology, calls Hoſius the Father and Preſident of all the Councils. The Name of this Biſhop is the Firſt in all the Subſcriptions. Alexander was much eſteemed as appears by the Letter of the Council. Euſtathius of Antioch is call'd the chief Biſhop of the Council by Proclus and by Facundus. But it is more probable that Hoſius preſided there in his own Name and not in the Pope's: For he no where aſſumes the Title of Legate of the Holy See, and none of the Ancients ſays, that he preſided in this Council in the Pope's Name. Gelaſius Cyzicenus who firſt affirm'd it, ſays it without any Proof or Authority.

(f) The Aſſembly was held in his Palace.] Euſebius ſays ſo expreſly B. III. of the Life of Conſtantine Ch. 10. Socrates B. I. of his Hiſtory Ch. 18. and Theodoret B. I. Ch. 7. following herein the Teſtimony of Euſebius. 'Tis true that this place is called by Euſebius himſelf in Ch. 7. a Sacred Place, but it is upon the account of the Aſſembly of the Biſhops who were then in it.

(g) All the Biſhops except Secundus and Theonas ſigned this Creed.] This appears by the Letter of the Synod, and by the Teſtimony of Theodoret B. I. Ch. 7. and of Philoſtorgius. Some ſay, that Euſebius and Theognis would not ſign the Condemnation of Arius, and that they were condemned in the Council. This is not true, and if they did alledge this diſtinction, it was after the Council of Nice and not in the Council.

(h) Arius, Secundus and Theonas were condemned, &c.] This appears by the Letter of the Council, tho' St. Jerome affirms the contrary concerning Arius. St. Athanaſius, who is more to be credited than St. Jerome in this matter, ſays ſeveral times that Arius was condemned in the Council of Nice. Socrates, Sozomen and Theodoret do alſo teſtify the ſame thing.

(i) Which is a kind of Re-ordination.] It is commonly thought that this Impoſition of Hands, which the Fathers of this Council call, μυστικὴν χειροθεσίαν, was only a Ceremony; but Valeſius has very well proved that it was a new Ordination; and this is the thing which the Word does properly ſignify.

(k) There were never more Genuine.] Theodoret and Ruſinus mention only theſe 20 Canons; tho' the latter reckons 22 of them, yet he own'd no more, becauſe he divided 2 of them. The Biſhops of Africa found but 20 of them, after they had enquired very diligently all over the Eaſt for all the Canons made by the Council of Nice. Dionyſius Exiguus and all the other Collectors of Canons, have acknowledg'd but theſe 20. The Arabick Canons which Echellenſis publiſh'd under the Name of the Council of Nice, cannot belong to this Council, becauſe of an urgent neceſſity, or becauſe of their great diſtance, he may be ordain'd by three Biſhops, provided that thoſe who are abſent be willing and conſent by their Letter that this Ordination ſhould be made; but it adds, that the validity of what is done in the Province depends upon the Metropolitan.

The 5th. ordains, that none of thoſe who ſhall be ſeparated from the Church by the Biſhops in each Province, can be receiv'd or reſtor'd to Communion in any other place; and that Enquiry be the better made, whether their Biſhop has juſtly excommunicated them, they ordain, that two Synods ſhall be held every year in every Province, one before Lent and the other in Autumn.

The 6th. Canon is famous for the ſeveral Queſtions it has occaſion'd. The moſt natural Senſe that can be given to it, is this: 'We ordain, that the ancient 'Cuſtom ſhall be obſerv'd, which gives Power to 'the Biſhop of Alexandria, over all the Provinces of 'Egypt, Libya, and Pentapolis, becauſe the Biſhop 'of Rome has the like Juriſdiction over all the Suburbicary Regions (for this Addition muſt be ſupplied 'out of Ruffinus:) We would likewiſe have the 'Rights and Priviledges of the Church of Antioch, 'and the other Churches preſerved; but theſe Rights 'ought not to prejudice thoſe of the Metropolitans. 'If any one is ordain'd without the conſent of the 'Metropolitan, the Council declares, that he is no 'Biſhop: but if any one is canonically choſen by the 'Suffrage of almoſt all the Biſhops of the Province, 'and if there are but one or two of a contrary Opinion, the Suffrages of the far greater number ought 'to carry it for the Ordination of thoſe particular 'Perſons.' This Canon being thus explain'd has no difficulty in it. It does not oppoſe the Primacy of the Church of Rome, but neither does it eſtabliſh it. It preſerves to great Sees their ancient Privileges, that is, the Juriſdiction or Authority which they had over many Provinces, which was afterwards call'd the Juriſdiction of the Patriarch or Exarch. In this ſenſe it is, that it compares the Church of Rome to the Church of Alexandria, by conſidering them all as Patriarchal Churches. It continues alſo to the Church of Antioch, and all the other great Churches, whatſoever Rights they could have; but leſt their Authority ſhould be prejudicial to the ordinary Metropolitans, who were ſubject to their Juriſdiction, the Council confirms what had been ordain'd in the fourth Canon concerning the Authority of Metropolitans in the Ordination of Biſhops. This Explication is eaſie and natural, and we have given many proofs of it in our Latin Diſſertation concerning the ancient Diſcipline of the Church.

[Only ſo far, as it may by a negative Argument, be hence very ſtrongly concluded, That the See of Rome then claimed none but Privileges common to it and other Metropolitical Sees.]

The 7th. is, that ſince by ancient Tradition the Church of Elias, or of Jeruſalem has been honoured, this Prerogative of Honour ſhall be continued to it, but without prejudice to the Rights of its Metropolis.

The 8th. declares, that the Novatians who return to the Church, may continue in the Clergy after they have received Impoſition of Hands, and made Profeſſion of following the Diſcipline of the Church. That if a Novatian Biſhop in a City, where there is a Catholick Biſhop, return to the Church, he ſhall not take the place of the Catholick Biſhop, but continue in the Presbytery, unleſs the Catholick Biſhop will allow him the Name of a Biſhop: But if he will not, this Novatian Biſhop ſhall continue Prieſt or Suffragan.

The 9th. or 10th. ordains, that thoſe Prieſts ſhall be degraded, who are found either to have ſacrificed, or to have been guilty of other Crimes before their Ordination.

The 11th. impoſes a Penance of ten years upon thoſe who voluntarily renounce the Chriſtian Religion, without being forced, either by the loſs of their Eſtate, or danger of their Life.

The 12th. impoſes thirteen years penance upon thoſe who having ſhown their Zeal for the Faith did afterwards apoſtatize to obtain Offices: Nevertheleſs it permits this Penance to be ſhorten'd in favour of thoſe who teſtify much Grief and Remorſe.

The Councils.

The 13th. renews the ancient Law, which ordains, that dying Perſons ſhall not be deprived of the laſt and moſt neceſſary Viaticum, that is, of Abſolution; but upon condition, that if the ſick Perſon recovers his Health, he ſhall be placed only in the Rank of thoſe who are preſent only at the Prayers of the Church. It leaves it at the diſcretion of the Biſhop to give or to refuſe the Communion to dying Perſons who deſire it.

The 14th. turns back thoſe Catechumens to the place of Hearers, who apoſtatized when they were ready to receive Baptiſm, and enjoins them to continue in that place for three years before they can be reſtor'd to the place wherein they were before.

The 15th. forbids the Tranſlations of Biſhops and Prieſts, and ordains, that thoſe who ſhall be tranſlated, ſhall return to their firſt Church.

The 16th forbids the receiving of Prieſts, Deacons or Miniſters of another Church, without the conſent of their Biſhop.

The 17th. ordains, that Clergy-men who are Uſurers, or who take ſordid Gain, ſhall be depoſed.

The 18th. forbids Deacons to give the Euchariſt to Prieſts, becauſe it is againſt the Canons and contrary to cuſtom, and they have not the Power to offer nor to give the Body of Jeſus Chriſt, to thoſe who do offer. It forbids them alſo to take the Euchariſt before the Biſhops, and advertiſes them that they are but inferior Miniſters to Prieſts; that they ought to receive the Euchariſt after them from the hand of a Biſhop or a Prieſt; that 'tis not lawful for them to ſit in the place of Prieſts, and threatens thoſe who do not obey this Rule with the deprivation of their Miniſtry.

The 19th ordains, that the Paulianiſts ſhall be rebaptiz'd who return to the Church; and that if there be found any who had the Name of Clergy-men among theſe Hereticks who are worthy of Orders, the Biſhop ſhall ordain them after they have been baptized; but if they be not found worthy of Holy Orders they ſhall be depoſed. It ordains the ſame thing of Deaconeſſes who are reckoned among the Clergy, tho' they never receiv'd Impoſition of Hands, that they ſhall be placed among the Laity.

The laſt Canon aboliſhes the cuſtom of ſome Churches wherein they kneeled on Sunday and Whitſunday, and ordains for keeping Uniformity, that they ſhall pray to God ſtanding at this time in all Churches.

We muſt add to the Hiſtory of this Council two remarkable Stories related by Socrates and Sozomen, which Socrates ſays he learn'd from an old Man who aſſiſted at this Council. The firſt is concerning Aceſius a Novatian Biſhop, who being asked by the Emperor, Whether he approv'd the Deciſion of this Council? anſwer'd him, That he had receiv'd from his Anceſtors the Faith which they had decree'd, and that he always celebrated Eaſter on the Day which they had appointed. The Emperor having afterwards ask'd him, Why then did he ſeparate from the Communion of the Church? He alledg'd the Indulgence which the Church had given from the time of Decius, and ſaid that thoſe who had faln into crimes ought never to be receiv'd into the Communion of the Church, and that they ought to expect Pardon from God only who only could grant it them. The Emperor hearing this Anſwer, anſwer'd him pleaſantly, O Aceſius, take then a Ladder, and mount up to Heaven alone. The other Story concerns Paphnutius a Biſhop in Egypt, who oppos'd the Canon, which was propos'd in the Council for obliging Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons to obſerve Celibacy. This good Man ſaid, that tho' he had liv'd all his Life-time in Celibacy, yet he did not think, that this Yoke ought to be impos'd upon the Clergy. Some queſtion the truth of this Story; I believe they do it rather for fear leſt this Story might prejudice the preſent Diſcipline, than from any ſolid Proof they have for it. sider that this Canon is purely a matter of Discipline, and that the Discipline of the Church may change according to the times, and that 'tis not necessary for the Defence of it, to prove that it was always Uniform in all Places.

[This would be an excellent Defence for the Discipline of the Church of Rome in this particular, if there were some Ages wherein Celibacy could more easily be preserved than it can in others; or if the Constitution of Mankind varied according to the Temporal Interests of any one private Church.]

What we have hitherto said, shews, that the Authentical Monuments of the Council of Nice are the Confession of Faith, with the Anathematism subjoyned to it, the Letter of the Synod to the Egyptians, the Decree concerning Easter, and the twenty Canons. I do not think that there ever were any other Acts of this Council (l), since they were unknown to all the ancient Historians. There is a Latin Letter of this Synod to St. Sylvester extant, but it is supposititious (m), which has no Authority, and which has all the Marks of Forgery, that any Writing can have, as well as the pretended Answer of St. Sylvester (n). Neither is that Council genuine, which is said to have been assembled at Rome by St. Sylvester for the confirmation of the Council of Nice. The Canons of this Council are also forged (o), which contain Rules contrary to the Practice of that time, and which it had been impossible to observe.

The Councils.

Constantine sent a Letter to the Catholick Church which is instead of a Synodical Letter of the Council, because by this Letter he publishes what was decided concerning Easter. He says nothing of the cause of the Arians and Meletians, because that particularly concerned the Egyptians to whom the Council gave an account of it. He condemn'd Arius and the Arians: He sent this Heretick into banishment with Secundus and Theonas, who would not subscribe the Decrees of the Synod; and the Council ending happily in the Month of August in the Year 325, at the beginning of the second Year of his Reign, he gave the Bishops a noble Entertainment, and sent them home loaded with Presents, after he had exhorted them to Unity.

(l) I do not think that there ever were any other Acts of this Council.] If there had been any, St. Athanasius would have sent them to his Friend, who desired of him the History of the Council of Nice, or he would have bid him read them: But he never did it, and he gives him an account of his own of what was done in the Council. There is a Passage cited out of St. Athanasius, to prove that he acknowledged other Acts of this Council. 'Tis taken out of the Book of Synods, where mention is made in the Version of it, of the Acts of the Council of Nice. But in the Greek it is only τὰ τῶν πάλαι, which has been written by the Fathers; and 'tis plain that he speaks in this place of the Confession of Faith. And that which farther shews that there never were any Acts of the Council of Nice, is, that the Fathers of the Council themselves in their Letter to the Egyptians, say, that their Arch-Bishop Alexander, should inform them particularly of all that pass'd in the Synod. In a word, neither Rufinus, nor Socrates, nor Theodoret, nor any ancient Historian, had ever seen or known these Acts. St. Jerome says, that he had read the Acts of the Council of Nice, but he means only the Creed, the Canons, and the Subscriptions. The Acts which Gelasius Cyzicenus attributes to Dalmatius were made since the Council, and taken out of Eusebius, Theodoret, Socrates, Sozomen, and other Historians.

(m) The Letter of the Council to St. Sylvester is supositious.] The Style of it is barbarous and intricate. It begins with this Period which has no sense: Gloriam corroborata de divinis mysteriis. Ecclesiastica utilitatis quæ ad robur pertinent Ecclesiæ Catholicæ & Apostolicæ ad sedem tuam Romanam explanata, & de Græco redacta scribere confitemur; and afterwards, Nunc itaque ad vestræ sedis argumentum accurrimus roborari, and so on. It is all made up of such kind of stuff. The Date is ridiculous, wherein the Consuls are called Sovereigns, an Epithet never given to them, and the Letter is dated five or six Days after the Opening of the Council.

(n) The Answer of St. Sylvester.] The Style is like that of the former Letter; it supposes that St. Sylvester added something to the Council of Nice, it mentions the Cycle of Victorinus who lived long after St. Sylvester. The Date of the Consuls also is false.

(o) The Canons of this Council are also forged.] The Inscription of this Council discovers its Imposture: There 'tis said, that the Council was held in the presence of Constantine in the City of Rome; but Constantine came not to Rome that Year. 'Tis also observed, that it consisted of 275 Bishops: Who can think that Sylvester assembled so numerous a Synod, and yet that it should be unknown to all Antiquity? Why is it not mentioned in some ancient Author? The first Canon concerning the time of Easter is Nonsense. The second is yet more unintelligible: These are the Words of it; Ut unusquisque Episcopus rediens ad Parochiam suam, compaginem salutationis plebi tuæ innotescat. Thus the Style of it is as barbarous as is possible. The third Canon forbids the Clergy to appear before secular Judges for any Cause whatsoever. This is contrary to the Discipline of that time. The fourth declares, that those who would enter into holy Orders, should pass through all the Degrees, and be one Year Porters, twenty Years Readers, ten Years Exorcists, five Years Acolyths, as many Years Sub-deacons, and yet as many Deacons, and afterwards Priests, and that they cannot be Bishops till the End of 6 Years more; from whence it would follow that none could be ordain'd Bishops till they were more than 60 Years old; which is ridiculous and contrary to the Practice of the ancient Church.

'Tis probable that in this Council they depos'd Asclepas Bishop of Gaza, and condemn'd Eutropius of Adrianople. However this be, this Council has not left any Monument in Writing.

THE Emperor call'd a Council in the Year 335, in the City of Tyre, to judge the cause of St. Athanasius. He wrote a Letter to the Bishops of this Synod, wherein he exhorts them to settle peace and concord in the Church: He recommended it to them to judge justly and without Prejudice, and threatned those with banishment who would not appear at the Council. He sent thither Count Dionysius with Guards to hinder any Disorder. This Council consisted of sixty Eastern Bishops or thereabouts. St. Athanasius came thither with forty Bishops of Egypt; he was forc'd to appear there as a Criminal. Several Accusations were propos'd which could not be prov'd, and so they insisted upon that of the Chalice, which they alledg'd he had caus'd to be broken in Marœotis by his Priest Macarius. The Council sent Deputies to the places to inform themselves of the Truth or Falshood of this Story. But since the Deputies were the greatest Enemies of St. Athanasius, who could not fail of returning their Information to his Disadvantage, he thought himself obliged to retire, and appeal to the Emperor. Some time after, the Deputies returning with an Information, which they had made as they would themselves, the Synod pronounced against him a Sentence of Condemnation and Deposition.

THE Synod of Tyre was not yet finiſhed, when the Emperor ſent a Letter to the Biſhops, wherein he ordered them to come preſently to Jeruſalem, to make there the Dedication of a Magnificent Church which he had built there. They obeyed the Emperor's Orders, and having perform'd this Ceremony with much Pomp, they made a Synod there, wherein they received Arius, &c. I know very well that Valeſius affirms that Arius was then dead, and that the Council received only the Followers of Arius. But St. Athanaſius ſays plainly in his Book of the Synods of Ariminum and Seleucia, that Arius and his Followers were received in this Council. We have in St. Athanaſius the Synodical Letter of this Council written to the Egyptians and Alexandrians, wherein they write to them, that they had received Arius and his Party after they were ſatisfied that they held very Orthodox Doctrines.

THE Euſebians deſiring to obtain the Favour of Pope Julius, ſent Deputies to him about the end of the Year 339, to requeſt of him a Council to judge the cauſe of St. Athanaſius, and declared to him at the ſame time, that if he pleaſed they would make him Judge of their Difference. Julius anſwered them, that it was juſt a Council ſhould be aſſembled in what place they pleaſed; that there they might propoſe their Accuſations againſt St. Athanaſius, and anſwer what he had to ſay againſt them. The Euſebians without waiting for this Synod, where they could not be Judges, any more than St. Athanaſius, aſſembled oftentimes at Antioch, where they ordained one Gregory, to fill the See of Alexandria, and ſent him to ſeize upon it by main Force. St. Athanaſius underſtanding what they had done, retired to Rome, where he was kindly received by Pope Julius, who wrote immediately to all the Eaſtern Biſhops, that they ſhould come to Rome on the Day which he appointed, there to appear before the Synod which was to be aſſembled about the end of the Year 341. The Euſebians never appeared, and detained the Pope's Legates who brought this Letter, till the Month of January in the next Year. However, the Biſhops of Italy aſſembled in a Church of Rome, and examined the Cauſe of St. Athanaſius, and that of Marcellus of Ancyra. All the Accuſations which had been alledged againſt the former were propos'd, and after he had proved them all to be falſe he was declar'd innocent. Marcellus of Ancyra perſuaded the Biſhops that his Faith was Orthodox, and declared that his Books were miſ-underſtood, and ſo was acquitted alſo. At laſt, the Council prayed Julius to write to the Biſhops of the Eaſt; which he did in the Year 342, after the return of his Legates. We have often already ſpoken of this Letter of Julius, and therefore it is not neceſſary to ſay any thing more of it here.

Of Rome, &c. 341.

Of the Councils held at Antioch.

Of Antioch. 341. 342.

THE Eaſtern Biſhops having quitted the Deſign they had of appearing before a Council of the Weſt, or of taking the Pope for Judge of their differences with St. Athanaſius, aſſembled at Antioch in the beginning of the Year 341, and there held a Synod of Ninety Biſhops or thereabouts. The occaſion of this Synod was the Celebration of the Dedication of the Church of Antioch. But as it was the cuſtom of the Biſhops when they were aſſembled to make ſome Eccleſiaſtical Rules, ſo theſe thought fit to compoſe New Confeſſions of Faith, and to make Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church.

Of Antioch. 341. 342.

In the Firſt of theſe Confeſſions of Faith, they declare, that they are not Followers of Arius, and that they have no other Faith but what they receiv'd by Tradition; that they reſtore Arius, becauſe they found that his Doctrines were Orthodox, but that they

they do not follow him. After this Proteſtation there followed a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein they do not uſe the Word Conſubſtantial, but they declare, That they believe in one only Son of God, coexiſtent with his Father who begot him, by whom all things were made; and in the Holy Spirit. This was the Firſt Confeſſion of Faith that was made after that of the Council of Nice; and it was quickly follow'd by a Second made by the ſame Biſhops in the ſame place, wherein they enlarge much more upon the Attributes of Jeſus Chriſt: They ſay, That he was Born of the Father before all Worlds, That he is God of God, Whole of Whole, a perfect Being, &c. That he is the perfect Image and exact Reſemblance of the Divinity, of the Subſtance, of the Will, the Power and Glory of the Father. They add, that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt are not three different Names, but three Subſiſtences, and that they are one in Will. They pronounce an Anathema againſt thoſe who ſay, That there was an Age or a Moment before the Generation of the Word, or who ſay, That he is a Creature form'd like other Creatures, Theſe Expreſſions of being one by Will, of being a Creature like others, and ſome others like them which are in this Confeſſion of Faith, render it very much ſuſpected.

For this reaſon perhaps it diſpleaſed ſome Biſhops of the Synod, which obliged Theophronius Biſhop of Tyana to make a third Confeſſion, which was approv'd by all, wherein they profeſs to believe in Jeſus Chriſt, The only Son of God, God, the Word, the Power and Wiſdom by which all things were created, who was begotten of the Father before all Worlds, perfect God of perfect God, who exiſts in the Father Hypoſtatically. This Confeſſion of Faith has nothing that could render it ſuſpected, but only the omiſſion of the Word Conſubſtantial. Theſe are the three Confeſſions of Faith which were made in this Council.

As to what concerns the Diſcipline of the Church, thoſe Biſhops ſuppoſing that St. Athanaſius had been fairly judged in the Council of Tyre, thought they had no more to do but ordain a Biſhop in his room. At firſt they caſt their Eyes upon Euſebius of Edeſſa, a Diſciple of Euſebius of Cæſarea, and of Patrophilus of Scythopolis: But this prudent Man refuſing it, leſt he ſhould be affronted by the People of Alexandria who loved St. Athanaſius, they choſe Gregory, and pray'd the Emperor to ſend him with a ſtrong Force to Alexandria to take Poſſeſſion of that Church.

Afterwards they made 25 Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church, whoſe Authority has been diſputed upon the account of thoſe who made them. St. Chryſoſtome and Pope Innocent reject them as being compoſed by Arians; yet they were inſerted into the Code of the Univerſal Church, and cited in the Council of Chalcedon, where ſome Canons of this Council of Antioch are quoted; and ſince that time they have had a place in all the Collections of Eccleſiaſtical Canons. And indeed, they contain the the wiſeſt, and the juſteſt Rules that ever were obſerved in the ancient Church; which has made ſome Authors believe, that part of them at leaſt were made by another Synod; but their Conjectures will not hold, and it is evident, that the 4th. 12th. and 15th. were made by this Synod, ſince they are the ſame which St. Chryſoſtome and Pope Innocent reject, becauſe they were made by Arians. This being evident, ſay I, 'tis very probable, that all the other Canons were made by the ſame Council, eſpecially ſince in all the Collections, they are attributed to one Synod of Antioch only, which was held ſoon after the Council of Nice.

But we muſt carefully diſtinguiſh this Council of Antioch, of which we have juſt now ſpoken, that was held in the Year 341, from another Synod made up of a part of the ſame Biſhops, who aſſembled in the beginning of the Year 342; for this laſt was held after St. Athanaſius was acquitted, when the Biſhops of the Eaſt ſent back the Pope's Legates, after they had been detained till January, in the Year 342. 'Twas in the name of this Synod that they wrote a Letter to Julius, wherein they excuſe themſelves for not being able to come to the Synod of Rome which he had aſſembled, both upon the account of the War with the Perſians, and becauſe of the ſhortneſs of the time between the Delivery of Julius's Letter to them, and the Day which he had ſignified to them for the meeting of the Synod. They took it ill that Julius had written to them all alone, and had addreſs'd his Letter only to Euſebius; but above all they complained that he had taken into his Communion, Athanaſius and Marcellus, who were condemned and depoſed.

The Councils.

Probably 'twas in this laſt Synod that the Fourth Confeſſion of Faith was compos'd which is produced by St. Athanaſius. It comes very near to that of the Council of Nice, ſaving only that it omits the Word Conſubſtantial. They made it, as St. Athanaſius obſerves, to ſend it into the Weſt to the Emperor Conſtans.

The 1ſt. Canon of the Council of Antioch confirms the Decree of the Council of Nice, concerning the Celebration of Eaſter.

The 2d. condemns thoſe who would never communicate, and who have an averſion to the receiving of the Euchariſt, and forbids the holding Communion with thoſe that are excommunicated, under the Penalty of being excommunicated themſelves.

The 3d. forbids Clergymen to forſake their Churches to abide in others, and ordains that he who will not return being recall'd by his own Biſhop, ſhall be depoſed, and that the Biſhop who detains him ſhall be puniſh'd by the Synod.

The 4th. ordains, that in caſe a Biſhop being depoſed by a Synod, and a Prieſt or a Deacon being depoſed by his Biſhop, ſhall dare to diſcharge the Functions of their Offices before they be reſtored, they can never hope to be reſtor'd in another Synod; That they ſhall not be permitted to defend themſelves, and that all thoſe ſhall be excommunicated who have communicated with them, and knew the Judgment that was given againſt them.

The 5th. is, that if a Prieſt or a Deacon deſpiſing his Biſhop, ſeparate from the Church, and make private Meetings, ſetting up a New Altar, and will not obey his Biſhop, when he ſhall be admoniſh'd and call'd back again two or three times, he can no longer hope to continue in his Office, and if he continue to trouble the Church, the Aid of the Secular Arm may be implor'd to chaſtiſe this ſeditious Perſon.

The 6th. forbids the receiving of an excommunicated Perſon until he has been reſtored to Communion by his Biſhop.

The 7th. ordains, that no Perſon ſhall be received into Communion, who has not Letters of Peace, i. e. Letters teſtifying that he is not ſeparated from the Communion of the Church.

The 8th. declares, that theſe Letters cannot be given by the Prieſts who are in the Country Villages, or at leaſt that they cannot addreſs them but only to their neighbouring Biſhops; but that the Suffragans may grant them.

The 9th. ordains, that the Biſhops of the Province reverence their Metropolitan, and do nothing of conſequence without him, but only take care of the Dioceſs, to ordain Prieſts and Deacons, and to regulate the particular Affairs of their Church; but to do nothing more without the Metropolitan, who ought likewiſe to do no conſiderable thing without taking the Advice of the Biſhops of the Province.

The 10th. regulates the Rights of Suffragans. It enjoyns them not to exalt themſelves above their Rank; to take care of the Churches, which are ſubject to them, without meddling with the Affairs of others. It permits them in their own Churches to ordain Readers, Sub-Deacons and Exorciſts, but it forbids them to ordain Prieſts and Deacons, tho' they have even received Impoſition of Epiſcopal Hands, that is, tho' they have been ordained Biſhops. Laſtly, it ordains, that the Suffragan ſhould be ordained by the Biſhop of the City.

The 11th. ordains, that in caſe a Biſhop, or a Prieſt, or another Clergyman addreſs to the Emperor without the Conſent of the Biſhops of the Province, and chiefly of the Metropolitan, he ought to be excommunicated and depoſed; but if he has any Affairs which oblige him to wait upon the Emperor, he may do it with the Conſent of the Metropolitan, and the Biſhops of the Province, which ſhall be expreſs'd in the Letters which they give him.

The 12th. forbids Clergymen who have been depoſed by their Biſhop to addreſs themſelves to the Emperor, to obtain Reſtitution; and takes from thoſe who ſhall do it all hopes of being reſtored.

The 13th. forbids Biſhops to paſs from one Province to another to ordain there, unleſs they be called by the Metropolitan of the Province, and nulls every thing which ſhall be done by one Biſhop of a Province.

The 14th. ſays, that in caſe the Biſhops of one Province cannot agree about judging of a Biſhop, the Metropolitan may call the Biſhops of the neighbouring Province, to judge and decide this Controverſy.

But it is ordained in the 15th. that if a Biſhop is condemned unanimouſly by all the Biſhops of the Province, he cannot be judg'd a-new, and that the Sentence of the Synod of the Province ought to remain firm.

The 16th. declares, that if a Biſhop who has no Biſhoprick, invade a vacant Church, without the Authority of a Synod, he ought to be driven away from it, tho' the People of the Church whereof he is Biſhop ſhould chooſe him. It adds, that a Synod cannot be compleat and lawful without the preſence of the Metropolitan.

The 17th. declares, that if any being ordained Biſhop, refuſe to accept of the Biſhoprick, he is to continue excommunicated until ſuch time as he accepts it, or that the Synod of the Province has otherwiſe determined about it: But if it be none of his Fault, that he does not go to his Church, but becauſe the People of the Church will not receive him, it is ordained in the 18th Canon, that he ſhall have the Honour and Place of a Biſhop, upon condition that he do not any wiſe trouble the Church wherein he ſhall continue.

The Councils.

The 19th. forbids the Ordination of a Biſhop without a Synod and without the preſence of the Metropolitan. It adds, that 'tis convenient that all Biſhops of the Province ſhould be preſent at this Synod with him; but if this cannot be done, yet they muſt be ſummon'd to it, and ſeveral of them muſt give their Suffrages, either in the Synod, or by Letters: That if the Ordination be made otherwiſe, it ſhall not be good; but if ſome particular Perſons out of a Spirit of Contradiction conteſt it after it is thus made, the Suffrages of the major Part ſhould carry it.

The 20th ordains, that every Year two Synods ſhall be held in a Province; viz. the firſt, the third Week after Eaſter, and the ſecond in the Month of July, that ſo Prieſts, Deacons, and in ſhort, all thoſe who pretend that their Biſhop has done them any Injury, may have recourſe to the Synod. It forbids alſo to keep theſe Synods without the Metropolitans.

The 21ſt. forbids the Tranſlations of Biſhops.

The 22d. forbids a Biſhop to meddle within the Dioceſs of another, and to make any Ordination there.

The 23d. forbids a Biſhop to ordain his Succeſſor.

The 24th. provides for the preſervation of the Church-Lands: It gives the management of them to the Biſhops; but it ordains that the Prieſts ſhall take cognizance of the Lands of the Church, leſt after the Death of the Biſhop his Heirs ſeize upon them.

The Laſt regulates the uſes to which the Biſhop ſhould apply the Revenue of the Church: It ordains, that he ſhould diſpoſe of them, for the good of the Poor and of Strangers; and that he ſhall be content with neceſſaries, according to the command of the Apoſtle St. Paul; that he ſhall not keep the remainder to himſelf; that he ſhall not give it to his Brethren or to his Children, but that he ſhall diſtribute it according to the Advice of the Prieſts and Deacons; that if he does not do it, he ſhall be accountable to the Synod of the Province; And laſtly, that if the Prieſts and the Biſhop be accuſed of conſpiring together, to appropriate to themſelves the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, the Synod ſhall examine this Accuſation, and ſhall puniſh them if it be found true.

'Tis quoted as well as the others by St. Athanaſius. There they make profeſſion of believing in Jeſus Chriſt, the only Son of God, begotten of his Father before all Worlds, God of God, Light of Light; and they condemn thoſe that ſay, that he is not God, or that he was made of nothing, and thoſe that ſay, there are three Gods, and thoſe that confound the Divine Perſons. This Propoſition provoked the Deputies of the Biſhops of the Eaſt, who retired in great anger. Urſacius and Valens were received into Communion in this Council, after they had preſented a Manifeſto, wherein they condemn the Hereſies of Arius and Photinus. The Error of the latter was alſo condemn'd in this Synod. This Council was held in the Year 346. For, firſt, it was aſſembled when the Deputies of the Council of Antioch came into the Weſt, and brought with them their long Confeſſion of Faith; and St. Athanaſius ſays, that they did this three Years after the firſt Deputation which they made about the end of the Year 342. Secondly, Liberius ſays in his Letter to Conſtantius compos'd in the Year 354, that it was then eight Years ſince the Legates who came from the Eaſt, withdrew from the Council of Milan in great diſcontent. Laſtly, St. Athanaſius ſays, that Conſtantius commanded him to appear at Milan, in the fourth Year of his Abode in the Weſt; and he came in 341, and therefore this Synod was held about the end of the Year 345, or the beginning of the Year 346.

Of Cologne, &c. 346.

THere is commonly placed in the Year 346, a Synod which is thought to have been held at Cologne, and wherein 'tis ſaid that Euphratas Biſhop of this City was depoſed for denying the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt. The Acts of this Council are extant in the ſecond Tome of the Councils p. 615. But I find there is great probability that theſe Acts were forg'd, and that this Hiſtory is falſe: For this Euphratas who is ſaid to have been depos'd in this Synod in the Year 346, i.e. in the next Year after the Conſulſhip of Amantius and Albinus, was preſent the Year after at the Council of Sardica as a Catholick Biſhop, and was alſo one of the Deputies whom the Council ſent into the Eaſt, as appears by the Teſtimonies of St. Athanaſius and Theodoret. Is it poſſible that a Biſhop, who was a little before convicted of denying the Divinity of the Son, and then depos'd, ſhould be preſent at the Council of Sardica among the Catholick Biſhops, and ſhould be choſen for a Deputy by the whole Council? Some ſay, that this Council was held after that of Sardica; but this Hypotheſis which is contrary to the Date of the Acts, may alſo be eaſily deſtroy'd: For Maximinus of Triers who is thought to have preſided at this Council, as the Acts teſtify, died ſoon after the Council of Sardica, ſince it is certain by the Teſtimony of St. Athanaſius, in his Epiſtle to thoſe that lead a Monaſtick Life, That Paulinus, the Succeſſor of Maximinus, was Biſhop of Triers when Urſacius and Valens retracted, i.e. in the Year 349. But from the Year 347 to 349, Euphratas was always out of France, and conſequently it is impoſſible that he ſhould be depoſed by Maximinus of Triers.

There is alſo another Argument which proves the Acts of the Council of Cologne to be forg'd. Servatus Biſhop of Tongres, ſays, that he reprov'd Euphratas in the preſence of St. Athanaſius. Now this Biſhop could not have ſeen St. Athanaſius, but upon two Occaſions: Firſt, when this Saint was at Triers; and ſecondly, when Servatus was ſent into the Eaſt by Magnentius: But he could not reprove Euphratas in the preſence of St. Athanaſius neither when this Father was at Triers, ſince Euphratas could not be accus'd of this Error before the Council of Sardica, nor when he was ſent Deputy into the Eaſt; for then Maximinus of Triers, who is ſaid to have preſided at the Council of Cologne, was dead, as we have juſt now ſhown.

The Subſcriptions of theſe Acts do alſo plainly diſcover their Forgery: For there you may read the Names of Deſiderius of Langres, and of Simplicianus of Autun, who liv'd in the fifth Age of the Church; there is alſo the Name of Diſcolus Biſhop of Rheims, who is not to be found in the Catalogue of the Biſhops of that Church. Laſtly, Severinus who is ſaid to have been ordain'd in the room of Euphratas, was ſtill alive in the Year 402, according to the Teſtimony of Sulpitius Severus. 'Tis true the Names of Deſiderius and Diſcolus are amongſt the Names of the Biſhops of France, in the Subſcriptions of the Letter of the Council of Sardica; but 'tis probable that he that forged theſe Acts, took from thence theſe Names, and added to them the Names of the Biſhopricks. However it be, theſe Acts were unknown to all the ancient Hiſtorians, who make no mention of this Hiſtory, nor of the Council of Cologne. The firſt who cited them is the Author of the Acts of Servatus of Tongres, which the Learned now own to be ſuppoſititious. After him Servatus Lupus mentions them in the Life of Maximinus: Hogerius Abbot of Lobbes, and ſome modern Authors mention them; but their Authority is of little weight in ſo ancient a Matter as this.

Of Sardica. 347.

THE Emperors Conſtantius and Conſtans deſiring to reſtore Peace to the Church, call'd a Synod of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops, at Sardica in the Year 347 (a). Thither came 100 Biſhops from the Weſt, and 73 Biſhops from the Eaſt (b). But thoſe of the Eaſt having declared to thoſe of the Weſt, that they would not be preſent at the Council, unleſs St. Athanaſius, Marcellus, and the other Biſhops that were condemned, were excluded from Eccleſiaſtical Communion, and the Weſtern Biſhops refuſing to accept of this Condition, the Council was divided, and the Eaſtern Biſhops withdrew. Thoſe of the Weſt, of whom Hoſius was the Head and Preſident (c), did notwithſtanding hold a Synod in their abſence, to treat of the Faith, and of the Accuſations charg'd upon St. Athanaſius and the other Catholick Biſhops, and to make Canons concerning the Diſcipline of the Church. In Matters of Faith, they all agreed that they muſt not make any new Creed, but muſt hold to that of the Council of Nice: Yet ſome particular Perſons would have made a new Creed, in imitation of the Biſhops of the Eaſt, but all the Council diſapproved their Deſign. The Creed then drawn up is preſerved by Theodoret, Ch. 8. of the 2d. B. of his Hiſtory. Afterwards the Council took into their conſideration the perſonal Accuſations againſt St. Athanaſius and Marcellus of Ancyra. The firſt juſtified himſelf and was acquitted; the ſecond having alledged that Euſebius and his Adverſaries took for Affirmations what he propos'd as Objections, was alſo reſtor'd. Aſclepas Biſhop of Gaza was reſtor'd; Theodorus of Heraclea, Narciſſus of Neronius, Stephen of Antioch, George of Laodicea, Menophantus of Epheſus, Urſacius of Singidunum, Valens of Murſa, and Patrophilus of Scythopolis, were excommunicated and depoſed.

Of Sardica. 347.

Laſtly, the Council produced twenty Canons and wrote three Letters. The firſt which was addreſs'd to all the Biſhops, is produced by St. Athanaſius, and by St. Hilary in his Fragments; the ſecond is to Julius which is in St. Hilary in the ſame place, and the third is to the Churches of Alexandria. There was

(a) The Emperors Conſtantius and Conſtans called a Council at Sardica in the Year 347.] Socrates B. II. Ch. 20. and Sozomen, B. III. Ch. 11. teſtify that it was called in this Year. St. Athanaſius confirms this Epocha, becauſe he ſays, that it was held a year after the Council of Milan. It appears by the expreſs Teſtimonies of St. Athanaſius, that this Council was called by the Emperors. Hoſius ſays the ſame thing in his Letter to the Emperor, and the Hiſtorians, Socrates, Sozomen, Theodoret and Sulpitius Severus follow this Opinion. Socrates indeed ſays, the Biſhops of the Eaſt complain'd that Julius had allowed too little time for coming to the Synod; but he confounds what they ſay about the Council of Rome, with what concerns the Council of Sardica.

(b) Thither came 100 Biſhops from the Weſt, and 73 from the Eaſt.] St. Athanaſius in his Letter to thoſe that lead a Monaſtick Life, ſays, that this Council conſiſted of 170 Biſhops or thereabouts. Now it appears by the Subſcriptions of the Letter of the Biſhops of the Eaſt, that theſe Biſhops from the Eaſt were 73. St. Athanaſius indeed ſays, That the Letter of the Council of Sardica containing his Abſolution was ſign'd by 300 Biſhops, but this is to be underſtood not only of thoſe who were preſent at the Council, but alſo of thoſe who ſubſcribed after the Council was over, to its Synodical Letter.

(c) Of whom Hoſius was Head and Preſident.] The Name of this Biſhop is the firſt in the Subſcriptions which are in St. Athanaſius, who ſays, that he was the Head and Preſident of all the Councils where he was preſent. Theodoret ſays expreſly, that he preſided in this Council B. II. Ch. 15. of his Hiſtory, as well as Sozomen B. III. Ch. 11. and the Council of Chalcedon in their Diſcourſe to Marcianus, Tome IV. of the Councils, p. 825. Petrus de Marca has affirm'd, that he preſided in this Council in the Name of the Pope, but his Opinion is not founded on any ſolid Argument. The Pope's Legates ſign'd after him, and declared, that they only repreſented his Perſon: Julius Roma per Archidamum & Philoxenum Presbyteros.

The Councils.

alſo a long Letter to the Emperors, which was in St. Hilary's Book, but is not now in his Fragments, nor any where elſe.

On the other ſide the Eaſtern Biſhops who withdrew from Sardica, aſſembled at Philippopolis, and wrote a Letter from thence, which they dated from Sardica, addreſſed to all the Biſhops of the World. There they cry out upon St. Athanaſius, Marcellus of Ancyra and Aſclepas, and make them paſs for wicked Rogues. They declare, that they do not join with the Biſhops of the Weſt, becauſe they had receiv'd into their Communion thoſe Biſhops who were depoſed in the Eaſt, and upon the account of this pretended violation of their Authority they excommunicate Hoſius, Protogenes, Gaudentius, Maximinus and Julius. They complain that the whole World was turn'd upſide down, and the whole Church diſturbed for the ſake of one or two wicked Fellows. They accuſe the Biſhops of the Weſt of Arrogance, and reprove them for endeavouring to eſtabliſh a new Law, to give themſelves the Liberty of examining a-new what had been determined in the Eaſt. They obſerve that the ancient Diſcipline of the Church is contrary to this Practice, and that the Judgments given in the Eaſt ought to be confirm'd in the Weſt, as thoſe of the Weſt were received in the Eaſt. They prove this Rule by ſeveral Examples. Laſtly, they add to this Letter a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein they make Profeſſion of believing in the Son of God begotten of the Father before all Worlds, God of God, Light of Light, who created all things; and they condemn thoſe who ſay, That the Son was made of nothing, or that he is of another Subſtance than the Divine Subſtance, and that he is not of God, or that there was a time when he was not the Son of God: As alſo they anathematize thoſe who ſay, That there are three Gods, or that Jeſus Chriſt is not God, or that there is not one Chriſt only the Son of God, or that he is the ſame Perſon with the Father or the Holy Spirit. This Letter which is preſerved in the Fragments of St. Hilary is addreſs'd to Gregory of Alexandria, to Amphion of Nicomedia, and to ſeveral other Biſhops, and among the reſt to Donatus of Carthage. For which Reaſon the Donatiſts urge it in the Conference of Carthage, and the Catholick Biſhops being ignorant of this Hiſtory, ſay, that the Council of Sardica was made up of Arian Biſhops. Some ſay, that Paul of Conſtantinople was reſtor'd in the Council of Sardica, others who follow Epiphanius, ſay, that Photinus was condemned there. They are both miſtaken; for Paul was dead, and Photinus was not condemned in this Synod.

I have only now to give an Abridgment of the ſubject Matter of the Canons of the Council of Sardica. Theſe Canons were not compos'd as thoſe of other Councils in the form of Laws; but they are Propoſitions made by Hoſius and ſome other Biſhops, which are approved by all the Synod.

In the 1ſt. Hoſius ſays, That they ought wholly to aboliſh a wicked Cuſtom and pernicious Abuſe, by hindering Biſhops to paſs from one See to another. And having declared that Avarice and Ambition are the only cauſes of theſe Tranſlations, becauſe there is no Example of a Biſhop who ever quitted a great Biſhoprick to take a little one. He propoſes for a ſevere Puniſhment of this Fault, that thoſe who are guilty of it ſhall be excluded from Lay-Communion. And all the Fathers of the Council anſwered, We agree to it.

In the 2d. Canon, Hoſius adds, that the ſame Sentence ought to be pronounced againſt thoſe who excuſe themſelves, becauſe they were deſired by the Faithful of their ſecond Church; and the Synod ordains that it ſhall be ſo.

The three following Canons concern Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions. It had been ordained in the Council of Antioch, that the Deciſion of the Council of the Province could not be invalidated, and that if the Biſhops of the Province could not agree, they ſhould call in thoſe of the neighbouring Province.

The Council of Sardica falls foul upon theſe two Deciſions: For in the third Canon Hoſius propoſes, firſt, that it ſhould be forbidden to appeal to Judges of a neighbouring Province; and ſecondly, he ſays, that for the Honour of the Memory of St. Peter, he judg'd it convenient, with the leave of the Council, to ordain, that if a Biſhop condemned in his own Country thought himſelf innocent, thoſe who had judged him ſhould write of it to the Biſhop of Rome, to enquire whether the Cauſe of the Biſhop accuſed ſhould be examined a-new: That if he, and the Judges whom he ſhould name were of this Opinion, they muſt proceed to a new Deciſion upon the place; but if he did not think fit that the Cauſe ſhould be examined a-new, then the Sentence already paſt muſt ſtand good.

The Councils.

Gaudentius adds in the fourth Canon, that a Biſhop depoſed by the Synod of the Province, who deſires this new Deciſion, muſt not be expell'd his See, till the Biſhop of Rome has determined, whether the Cauſe ought to be examined a-new.

Laſtly, in the 5th. Canon, according to the Greek, and the 7th. according to the Edition of Dionyſius Exiguus, Hoſius ſays, that when the Biſhop of Rome thinks fit that the Cauſe of a Biſhop ſhould be examined a ſecond time, he ought to write to the Biſhops next adjoyning to his Province, that they examine the whole Matter with Care and Exactneſs; that he muſt alſo be impowered to ſend Legates in his own Name to this new Synod, unleſs he think it more convenient to leave the judging of the Cauſe to the neighbouring Biſhops of the Province only, without ſending thither his Legates. The Biſhops of the Council approve theſe Propoſitions of Hoſius and Gaudentius. Theſe three Canons have occaſioned great Diſputes, which would quickly vaniſh, if Men would confine themſelves to the Words of the Council of Sardica, which ſufficiently diſcover; firſt, that the Diſcipline which theſe Fathers eſtabliſh is New; ſecondly, that they do not give the Biſhop of Rome power to judge the Cauſe of a Biſhop in his own Tribunal at Rome; but they only give him Authority to enquire whether it were well or ill determined; and in caſe he find that it was determined wrong to order a new Deciſion of it in the Country, and by the neighbouring Biſhops of the Province where it was determined, whither he might ſend Legates in his own Name to be preſent, if he thought it convenient. This is the natural Senſe of the three Canons of this Council, which I have explained more at large in my ſecond Diſſertation of the Diſcipline of the Church.

The 5th. Canon according to the Edition of Dionyſius Exiguus declares, that if there remains but one Biſhop in a Province, and he will not ordain other Biſhops, the Biſhops ought to come to him and joyn with him in ordaining; but if he perſiſt in his unwillingneſs and will not meet them for ordaining Biſhops, the neighbouring Biſhops alone may then ordain them without his Conſent. This is the Propoſition of Hoſius, to which the Council agreed.

The 6th. is, that a Biſhop ought not to be ordained in a Borrough or little City, where a Prieſt is ſufficient, leſt the Dignity of a Biſhop be leſſened.

The following Canons are about the Journies of Biſhops to Court. Hoſius for hindering them to go thither continually, and importune the Emperor by their frequent Petitions, thought fit to ordain, Firſt, that none of the Biſhops ſhall go to Court, unleſs he be required by the Emperor's Letters.

Secondly, that thoſe who ſhall have Requeſts or Petitions to make for the Poor of their Churches, ſhall only ſend thither a Deacon.

Thirdly, that this Deacon, before he goes to Court ſhall addreſs himſelf to his Metropolitan, to whom he ſhall make known the occaſion of his Petitions, and of whom he ſhall obtain Letters of Requeſt and Recommendation.

Fourthly, that thoſe who ſhall go to Rome, ſhall addreſs themſelves to the Biſhop of that City, who having examined their Petitions, ſhall write of them to Court if he finds them juſt.

Fifthly, Gaudentius adds, that for putting theſe Rules in execution, the Biſhops which lie upon the Road, ſhall ask the Biſhops whom they ſhall ſee going going to Court, and if they find that they have not observed the Canons above-mentioned, they shall not receive them into their Communion. But because these Rules were New, Hosius moderates this Penalty, and says, that they must first make them known to these Bishops, and persuade them to send a Deacon to Court from the place where they shall be, and then return to their own Dioceſs. These Propositions are approved by the Council, and contained in the Canons 8, 9, 10, 11, 12.

In the 13th. Hosius says, that he thought it necessary to ordain, that Bishopricks shall only be given to those who have discharged the Offices of Reader and Deacon, or Priest, for a considerable time. The Bishops of the Council approve this Proposition.

In the 14th. Hosius says, that it ought to be ordained, that a Bishop should not continue longer than three Weeks, in the Dioceſs of another, and out of his own. All the Bishops are of this Opinion: But Hosius moderates this Law in the following Canon, in favour of those who have an Estate out of their Dioceſs, and who are obliged to continue there more than three Weeks for their Affairs, but he would have them forbidden after this time is spent, to go to the great Church of the City, and orders them to be present only at the Offering of a Priest.

In the 16th. Hosius proposes the renewing of that Law, which forbids a Bishop to give the Communion to him who is excommunicated by his own Bishop: And the Bishops of the Council say, that this Rule will preserve Peace and Concord.

The 17th. allows Priests and Deacons who are condemned by their own Bishop to appeal to the Judgment of the Bishops of the Province.

In the 18th. the Bishop Januarius desires that a Bishop may be forbidden to sollicit the Clergy of another Bishop, that he may ordain them in his own Dioceſs. The Council answers, that these Contests occasion Discord among Bishops, and is of Opinion, that it ought not to be done.

Hosius adds in the 19th. Canon, that the Ordination of a Clergyman of another Dioceſs ought to be void, and that the Bishop who shall do it, ought to be punished.

The Councils.

In the 20th. the Bishop Aëtius having remonstrated that many Priests and Deacons, Strangers, continued a long time at Thessalonica, the Synod ordains, that the Rules made with respect to Bishops may oblige these Persons.

The 21st. Canon according to the Edition of Dionysius Exiguus which we have followed, declares, that according to the Remonstrance of the Bishop Olympus, the Council is of Opinion, that a Bishop forc'd away from his own Dioceſs for the Defence of the Discipline of the Church, or of the Faith and Truth, may continue in the Bishoprick of another, till he can return to his own, for it would be great Inhumanity not to receive him who is persecuted, and that on the contrary, much Civility and Kindness ought to be shewn to him.

There are in the Greek two other Canons which concern a particular Business. The Bishop Gaudentius says to the Bishop Aëtius, that since he had had no trouble in his Dioceſs from the time that he was Bishop of it, he thought that he ought to receive those who were ordained by Musæus and Eutychianus. Hosius judged that he ought not to admit those who being ordained would not continue in the Churches to which they are nam'd. He adds, that Eutychianus and Musæus ought not to be look'd upon as Bishops, but if they desir'd Lay-Communion, it should not be refus'd them.

These Canons end with these Words in the Edition of Dionysius Exiguus, The whole Council hath said; The Catholick Church spread over all the Earth, shall observe what has been now ordain'd.

However, the Canons of the Council of Sardica were never received by the Catholick Church, as general Laws. They were never put into the Code of the Canons of the Universal Church, approv'd by the Council of Chalcedon. The East never received them, neither would the Bishops of Africa own them. The Popes only used them, and cited them under the Name of the Council of Nice, to give them the greater Weight and Authority.

Of the First Council of Sirmium.

Of the First of Sirmium. 349.

THE first Council of Sirmium was made up of Western Bishops; it was held in the Year 349, two Years after that of Milan. Photinus who had been already excommunicated, was there condemned, but he could not be forced away from his See, and therefore the Western Bishops only gave notice to the Eastern of the Judgment they had given against this Heretick. This is related in the Fragments of St. Hilary.

Of the Second of Sirmium. 351.

THE second Council of Sirmium was made up of Eastern Bishops assembled by the Emperor Constantius in the Year 351. Basil of Ancyra entred the Lists there against Photinus, and convicted him of Heresy. He was afterwards deposed by the Bishops, and sent into banishment by the Authority of the Emperor. In this Council was made the first Creed of Sirmium wherein the Bishops make profession of believing in Jesus Christ the only Son of God, born of his Father before all Worlds, God of God, Light of Light, by whom all Things were made. There they anathematize those that said, He was created of nothing, or of another Substance, or that he was not of God, or that he was made in Time; Those that said there are two Gods, or those who on the contrary averr'd, That the Father, or at least one part of him, was born of Mary, and also those who made no distinction of the Three Divine Persons, or who said, That the Divinity was changed into Flesh, and that it was subject to Sufferings and Changes. This is the Sum of that long Creed quoted in Greek by St. Athanasius, and in Latin by St. Hilary, who has considered and explained it as a very Orthodox Confession of Faith.

CONstantius had a long time desired to get Athanasius condemned by the Western Bishops. To compass this Design, he assembled a Synod in the Year 353, in the City of Arles. The Pope sent for Legates Vincentius of Capua, and another Bishop of Campania called Marcellus; and ordered them to desire the Meeting of a Council in the City of Aquileia. These Legates being arrived at the Council of Arles, desired that they would begin with handling the Doctrine, and with condemning the Error of Arius, before they spoke of the cause of St. Athanasius: But Ursacius and Valens who had no other Design but to procure the Condemnation of St. Athanasius, would not admit this Proposition; and forc'd the Bishops of the Council, and even the Pope's Legates to subscribe the condemnation of this Saint. There was none but only Paulinus Bishop of Triers that continued stedfast, and for this Reason he was banished immediately.

Liberius being informed of the Fall of his Legates, ſendeth Lucifer Biſhop of Calaris, to to wait upon the Emperor, and deſire of him a new Synod. The Emperor granted him one, and caus'd it to meet at Milan in the Year 355: But it did not anſwer the Pope's Expectation. The Emperor caus'd the Biſhops of the Eaſt and the Weſt to be ſummoned to it; but yet it was compos'd only of the Weſtern Biſhops. There came almoſt 300 to it. Thither they brought Euſebius of Verceilles, and Lucifer of Calaris, who was the Pope's Legate, together with Pancratius the Prieſt, and Hilary the Deacon. Theſe were invited to the Synod, and were urged to ſubſcribe the Condemnation of St. Athanaſius: They anſwer'd, that they muſt Firſt handle Matters of Faith; that they ſaw in the Aſſembly ſome Hereticks, or ſuch as were ſuſpected of Hereſy; That in the firſt place they muſt make profeſſion of the Faith contain'd in the Nicene Creed. Dionyſius of Milan took Pen and Paper, to write down and ſign the Creed: But preſently Urſacius and Valens took them by force out of his hands. Thereupon there aroſe a great Tumult, the People were put in a Commotion, and the Biſhops withdrew to the Palace, where they were preſs'd to ſign a Letter written in the Emperor's name againſt St. Athanaſius. There were but few Biſhops who could reſiſt the Emperor's Sollicitations, and thoſe who were ſo ſtedfaſt as to do it, viz. Euſebius of Verceilles, Dionyſius of Milan, and ſome others, were ſent into baniſhment. Baluzius in his new Collection of Councils, has cauſed the New Acts of this Council to be printed, taken out of the Life of Euſebius of Verceilles, publiſhed by Ughellus in the Firſt Tome of his Italia Sacra, but there is no probability that they are Authentical.

THE French Church had not yet been toſs'd with the Storms which troubled the Peace of all the Churches in the World. Saturninus Biſhop of Arles a factious Man, was the Firſt who brought thither the fire of Diviſion. He aſſembled in the Year 356, a Council at Beziers, and us'd all his Endeavours to make it receive the Followers of Arius; but St. Hilary oppos'd him ſtoutly, and having deſired them to treat of Doctrinal Matters offered to convict Urſacius, Valens and Saturninus of Hereſy. Inſtead of hearkening to him they wrote to Court againſt him, and he was ſent into baniſhment together with Rhodanius Biſhop of Tholouſe. After he was forced away, the Biſhops of this Council being devoted to the Intereſts of Saturninus, did whatever he deſired; but the other Biſhops of France would never communicate with him, nor with Urſacius and Valens, and would not ſuffer other Biſhops to be ordain'd in the room of thoſe that were baniſh'd.

THE greateſt part of the Eaſtern Biſhops oppoſed this Deſign of Eudoxius, and could not endure that he ſhould make ſo publick a Profeſſion of the Impious Doctrine of Aetius. George Biſhop of Laodicea wrote a Circular Letter upon this Subject, wherein he exhorted his Brethren to join together for defending the Faith of the Church. Baſil of Ancyra preſented this Letter to many Biſhops who were aſſembled in his City for Dedicating his Church, about the Feaſt of Eaſter in the Year 358. Theſe Biſhops wrote a Synodical Epiſtle related by St. Epiphanius, wherein they Firſt confirm'd the Creeds of the Eaſtern Biſhops made at Antioch, at Sardica, and at Sirmium, and then condemned the Hereſy of Aetius, and profeſſed to believe the Son of God to be like his Father. There follow after their Creed 18 Anathematiſms, wherein they condemn theſe following Impious Dogmes, viz. That the Son of God is not like to his Father, that he is unlike in Subſtance, that he is a Creature, that he is another God than God the Father, &c. At the end of theſe Anathematiſms there is one againſt thoſe who ſay, that the Father and the Son are Conſubſtantial. St. Hilary who explains the others, makes no mention of this laſt, becauſe the Deputies of this Synod durſt not bring it to Sirmium.

Of the Fourth Council of Sirmium.

Of the Fourth &c. 359.

SOON after the Council of Ancyra, there was a Council held at Sirmium, wherein the Biſhops of Italy and the Weſt were preſent. Therein was made a Collection of the Creeds of Antioch, of the Firſt of Sirmium, of that of Sardica, and of that of Ancyra which Euſtathius Biſhop of Sebaſtea, and Eleuſius Biſhop of Cyzicum, preſented to be ſign'd by all the Biſhops, who made no Scruple to do it.

Of the Fifth &c. 359.

CONſtantius having appointed two great Synods, one in the Eaſt at Seleucia, and the other in the Weſt at Ariminum, ſome Eaſtern Biſhops before they went to Seleucia, met together at Sirmium, where they made a new Confeſſion of Faith, which was dictated by Marcus of Arethuſa, after a long Conference with the other Biſhops, and was ſign'd by thoſe that were preſent. Therein they make Profeſſion of believing the Son of God to be in all things like to his Father; but they reject the name of Subſtance, as a Term that ought not to be us'd in ſpeaking of the Trinity, becauſe it is not found in Scripture, and is not intelligible by the People. Nevertheleſs Baſil of Ancyra added in his Subſcription, that the Son of God was in all things like to his Father, not only by the conſent of Will, but alſo in Subſtance and Eſſence. This Creed has the Names of the Conſuls at the beginning, which diſpleaſed many.

Of the Council of Ariminum.

Of Ariminum. 359.

WHile theſe things were a-doing in the Eaſt, the Weſtern Biſhops aſſembled from all Parts to Ariminum. The Emperor had ſent his Letters Mandatory for them, and provided for them publick Carriage, and Money for performing their Journey; but the Biſhops of France and Britain thought it below them to accept of theſe Offers, and choſe rather to travel at their own Expence. There came about 400 to the Synod, which began about the Month of July in the Year 359. Urſacius and Valens propoſed there the Creed which was made a little before at Sirmium: but the Council confin'd themſelves to that of Nice, and would not receive any other. This it declared by a Solemn Decree which was ſign'd by all the Biſhops, and to it they ſubjoined Anathematiſms againſt the Error of Arius, which are related at the end of St. Hilary's Fragments. Urſacius, Valens, Germinius and Demophilus refuſing to acquieſce in this Definition, were condemn'd by the unanimous conſent of all the Biſhops. Matters being thus determined in the Council to the advantage of the Faith of the Church, the Biſhops ſent Deputies to Conſtantius with a Letter, wherein they give him an account of what they had done: But on the other ſide Urſacius, Valens and their Followers, ſent alſo Deputies to the Emperor, and having much greater Intereſt in the Emperor, they prepoſſeſs'd him, and hindred him from giving Audience to the Deputies of the Synod. And ſo he did nothing but write back to them, that he had not time to hear the twenty Deputies which the Synod had ſent to him, becauſe he was obliged to go againſt the Perſians; and that he had given them Order to wait till his Return to Adrianople, becauſe he would examine Matters of Religion with a Mind calm and diſengaged from all other Buſineſs. The Council anſwer'd him, that they would never depart from what they had done, and they earneſtly prayed him to permit the Biſhops to return to their Churches before the rigour of the Winter. In the mean time, the Deputies of the Council aſſembled at Nice, a City of Thrace, and declared all that was done at Ariminum, null and void. Urſacius, Valens, and Germinius, approved a Confeſſion perfectly like that of Sirmium, wherein they declare, that the Son of God is like his Father in all things, and reject the Terms of Subſtance and Hypoſtaſis. Urſacius and Valens recited this Confeſſion of Faith at Ariminum, and the Emperor ſent his Commands to the Governor, that he ſhould not ſuffer any Biſhop to go away till he had ſign'd it, and gave order to ſend thoſe into baniſhment who ſhould continue obſtinate, provided they were no more than fifteen. At firſt they all teſtified much Conſtancy, but by little aud little they ſuffer'd themſelves to be overcome through Emulation, and the greateſt part of them ſign'd the Confeſſion of Faith: There were but twenty that held out to the laſt, but in the end they were overcome alſo, and ſign'd as well as the others. Nevertheleſs ſome of them, as Phegadius Biſhop of Tongres, added Profeſſions of Faith to their Subſcriptions, wherein they expreſly condemn the Hereſy of Arius. When all the Biſhops had ſign'd the Confeſſion of Faith, they wrote to the Emperor, that they had fully ſatisfied his Commands, by agreeing with thoſe of the Eaſt, and rejecting the Word, Subſtance; and therefore they prayed him earneſtly to give order to the Governor to ſuffer them to go to their Churches. The Emperor gave them leave: And thus ended this Council, whoſe beginning was glorious, and end deplorable.

Of Seleucia. 359.

WHile theſe things were doing in the Weſt, the Eaſtern Biſhops aſſembled at Seleucia, and there raiſed Diſputes which they maintained with extreme Heats. There came to this Synod 160 Biſhops of two different Parties altogether oppoſite to one another. One of them were pure Arians who maintained, that the Son of God was not at all like in Subſtance to his Father. There were about 40 of this Party. The others call'd Semi-Arians made profeſſion of believing the Son of God to be like in Subſtance, and rejected the Errors of Arius and Aëtius; thoſe of this Party were 105. The other Biſhops were probably Catholicks, Defenders of the Conſubſtantiality. There was an Officer from the Emperor's Court, call'd Leonas, preſent at the Council for hindering any Tumult. The Firſt Aſſembly was held on the 23d. of September in the Year 359. Leonas required the Biſhops to propoſe what they were to treat of. The Semi-Arians, whereof the chief were George of Laodicea, Eleuſius of Cyzicum, Sophronius of Pompeiopolis, Sylvanus of Tarſus, Macedonius of Conſtantinople, Baſil of Ancyra, Euſtathius of Sebaſtea, and St. Cyril of Jeruſalem, maintain'd, that Perſonal Cauſes ſhould be firſt examin'd before they handled Matters of Faith. On the contrary, the Arians, whereof the Heads were Acacius of Cæſarea, George of Alexandria, Uranius of Tyre, Eudoxius of Antioch, maintain'd, that they ſhould firſt begin with Matters of Faith; and they carried it againſt the others. They propos'd that the Nicene Creed ſhould be rejected, and a New one ſhould be made: But the Biſhops of the other Party ſaid, that they received the Council of Nice, and found nothing to be blam'd in it, but only the Word Conſubſtantial. Hereupon there aroſe a great Diſpute which laſted till Night. To put an end to it, Sylvanus of Tarſus ſaid with a loud Voice, that it was needleſs to make a New Creed, that they had nothing to do, but ſign that which was made at Antioch by the Synod held there for the Dedication of the Church. The Acacians ſeeing that this Propoſition was approv'd, withdrew, and the next Day the other Biſhops being ſhut up in the Church, cauſed the Creed of Antioch to be ſigned by all the Biſhops.

The Councils.

On the third Day, Leonas re-aſſembled the Biſhops of both Parties. The Acacians deſired that the Biſhops who were divided from them and depos'd, ſhould withdraw; they complained that they were not ſuffer'd to ſpeak freely in the Firſt Aſſembly; and they propos'd a Confeſſion of Faith wherein they declare, That they did not refuſe to approve the Creed made at Antioch, but that they were obliged to reject more expreſly the Terms, Conſubſtantial and like in Subſtance, which troubled the Church; that they did alſo condemn thoſe who ſaid that the Son of God was not like the Father, and that they made Profeſſion of believing with the Apoſtle that he was the Image and Reſemblance of the Father. They add, that the Creed of Sirmium was perfectly like their's. This Confeſſion of Faith is related by St. Epiphanius with the Subſcriptions of 39 Biſhops of this Party. St. Hilary obſerves, that the greateſt Part of thoſe who ſigned it being Anomæans, were forc'd to explain the Profeſſion which they then made, by ſaying, that the Son was like his Father as he was his Father, but he was not like him as he was God. The Fourth Meeting was ſpent in Diſputes which came to no end. Wherefore Leonas ſeeing that there was no means left to reconcile them, declared that he would put an end to the Council, and that he would not be preſent the next Day at the Aſſembly of the Biſhops. The Acacians took occaſion from thence to appear no more. The other Biſhops, after a Citation of them, depos'd Acacius, George of Alexandria, Uranius of Tyre, and Six other Biſhops of their Party, and excommunicated Nine of them. They reſtor'd Cyril of Jeruſalem, and ordained one named Anianus Biſhop of Antioch, in the room of Eudoxius; but this Anianus was immediately ſent into baniſhment. The Councils.

The Succeſs of what was done both by the one and the other Party in this Council, depended upon the Will of the Emperor; the buſineſs was, who ſhould firſt engage him. The Deputies of the Acacians came firſt to Conſtantinople; and they were quickly followed thither by thoſe of the Semi-Arians, whereof the chief were Euſtathius of Sebaſtea, Baſil of Ancyra, Sylvanus of Tarſus, and Eleuſius of Cyzicum; they were aſſiſted by St. Baſil who was as yet but a Deacon. The Emperor would have the Cauſe of the Faith diſcuſs'd in his own preſence. 'Tis ſaid that Aëtius entred upon a Conference with Baſil of Ancyra, and was convicted of Hereſy. However this be, Theodoret ſays, that Euſtathius of Sebaſtea preſented to the Emperor a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein it was ſaid that the Son of God was not like his Father, and accus'd Eudoxius of maintaining it; that the Emperor having given it to this Biſhop he denied it, and ſaid that it was Aëtius's, and that Aëtius, having acknowledged it for his, was driven out of the Palace. While theſe things are doing, the Nicene Creed, which was ſign'd at Ariminum, was brought to Conſtantinople, and the Emperor having propos'd it, it was ſign'd by all the Biſhops of both Parties.

Of the Council of Conſtantinople.

Of Conſtantinople. 360.

THE Acacians having ſtay'd at Conſtantinople, aſſembled there a Council of 50 Biſhops, in the beginning of the Year 360. Thither they invited the Biſhops of Bithynia who were of their Party, and they approv'd and publiſh'd in this Synod the Creed of the Council of Ariminum, changing only a few things in it. Afterwards they condemn'd Aëtius, and excommunicated three Biſhops who would not conſent to his Condemation. But as they condemned this Heretick only out of Policy, that they might obtain the favour of the Emperor who could endure him no longer; ſo they revenged themſelves afterwards upon all the Biſhops which oppos'd them in the Synod of Seleucia, and depos'd the Heads of the Semi-Arian Party, who were Macedonius of Conſtantinople, Baſil of Ancyra, Eleuſius of Cyzicum, Euſtathius of Sebaſtea, Heortaſius of Sardis, and Dracontius of Pergamus. In the Second Seſſion, they added to theſe Sylvanus of Tarſus, Sophronius of Pompeiopolis, Elpidius of Satala, and Cyril of Jeruſalem. They alledg'd many Pretences for depoſing of them, and ordain'd in their room Perſons of Aëtius's Party. Eudoxius poſſeſs'd himſelf of the See of Conſtantinople. Of Conſtantinople. 360.

Of the Synod of Melitine.

Of Melitine. 357.

THere is mention made in the Council of Conſtantinople, whereof we have juſt now ſpoken, of a Synod held at Melitine about the Year 357. This Synod was compos'd of Biſhops of Acacius's Party, ſince they alledge his Authority in the Council of Conſtantinople and condemn Elpidius for having received a Prieſt who had been depos'd in this Synod. St. Baſil in Letter 74 teſtifies, that Euſtathius of Sebaſtea was depos'd in this Council. St. Cyril was preſent there if we may believe the Biſhops of the Council of Conſtantinople. This is all that we could learn of this Synod, of which we have very little in Antiquity. Of Melitine. 357.

Of the Synod of Antioch.

Of Antioch. 361.

THE Church of Antioch continuing vacant by the departure of Eudoxius, Meletius was ordain'd Biſhop of it by a Synod which Conſtantius call'd in 361. 'Tis ſaid that ſome time after being invited to preach before the Emperor upon theſe words of the Proverbs, God hath created me in the beginning of his ways, he declared openly for the Faith of the Church; whereupon the Eudoxians call'd a Second Synod at Antioch, and depos'd him under pretence that he had received into his Communion ſome Clergy-men who were depos'd by Eudoxius and ordain'd Euzoius in his room. Afterwards they made a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein they diſcover plainly their impious Doctrine, making no ſcruple to declare, that the Son of God was not at all like his Father in Subſtance, and that he was created of nothing. This was the laſt Synod held under Conſtantius, and the laſt of the Creeds made by his Order. Of Antioch. 361.

Of the Council of Alexandria.

Of Alexandria. 362.

ST. Athanaſius being returned to Alexandria after the Death of Conſtantius, held a Council there to enquire what way they ſhould take with the Arians who were willing to be reconciled to the Church. In this Council the ſtate of the Church of Antioch was conſidered, and the Biſhops deputed Aſterius Biſhop of Amaſea, and Euſebius of Verceilles, to make Peace in that Church. The Queſtion of the three Hypoſtaſes was debated in this Council; and it was determin'd that it did not concern the Faith, and that thoſe who ſay there are three Hypoſtaſes in the Trinity are of the ſame Opinion with thoſe who ſay Of Alexandria 362.

The Councils. there is but one, because they understand the same word differently. In it they also speak of the Mystery of the Incarnation, and determine, that the Word did not only take a Body but also a Soul, and a Mind. We have lost the Synodical Letter, but the Letter which St. Athanasius wrote to the Church of Antioch by the Order of the Council, is still extant. He enjoyns them to receive the Christians who assembled in the ancient Church of Antioch, without exacting of them any other Condition, save only, that they condemn the Heresy of Arius; and be oblig'd to receive the Faith of the Nicene Council, and that they reject their Error who believed the Holy Spirit to be a Creature. He advertises them, that no New Creed was made in the Council of Sardica; he gives them an Account of what was determined in the Council of Alexandria, concerning the Hypostasis, and the Incarnation: He exhorts them to labour for Peace, and to shun such Questions as tended only to foment Divisions. This Letter was sign'd by the Deputies of Lucifer, of Paulinus and Apollinarius, and by Paulinus himself who approv'd it when it was brought to Antioch. The Councils.

Of the Council of Paris.

Of Paris. 362. THE Western Bishops who had been abused in the Synod of Ariminum, being conscious of their Fault, endeavour'd to repair it by assembling many Synods to annul what had been done there, and to maintain the Nicene Faith. France was none of the last that testified her Zeal upon this occasion. St. Hilary assembled there many Councils for Re-establishing the Faith of the Council of Nice. We have yet in the Fragments of St. Hilary, a Letter of a Council held at Paris, wherein the Bishops that were there present acknowledge, that they had done ill to consent in the Synod of Ariminum, that they should speak no more of the Word, Substance. They profess to believe, that the three Persons of the Trinity are of the same Nature, and of the same Substance, and they condemn Auxentius, Ursacius, Valens and Saturninus. This Council was in the Year 362. Of Paris. 362.

Of the Council of Italy.

Of Italy. 362. 'TWas not only in France that the Synod of Ariminum was rejected: The Bishops of Italy also nulled and voided all that had been done in this Synod, and anathematiz'd Ursacius and Valens as the Heads of the Arians. We have in the Fragments of St. Hilary a Letter written upon this subject in the name of the Bishops of Italy to the Bishops of Illyricum. Of Italy. 362.

Of the Council of the Egyptian Bishops, held at Antioch.

Of the Egyptian&c THE Emperor Jovian, a most pious Prince, being at Antioch in the Year 363, desir'd of St. Athanasius and the Egyptian Bishops, who were come to wait upon him in that City, that they would explain to him the Faith of the Church. These Bishops being assembled, propos'd to him no other Creed but that of the Council of Nice, and rejected the Error of the Macedonians who denied the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. It is commonly thought that this Council was assembled at Alexandria: But it appears by the Letter which it presented to the Emperor, related by Theodoret Ch. 3. of the 4th. B. of his History, that it was compos'd of some Egyptian Bishops, representing all the other Bishops of their Province, who had deputed them: Which plainly shews, that this Council was held out of Egypt, in the place where the Emperor was, that is, in Antioch, where 'tis certain St. Athanasius came to wait upon Jovian. Of the Council of Antioch under Meletius.

Of Antioch &c. 363. THE Acacians seeing that the Emperor Jovian favoured the Catholicks, joined themselves with Meletius Bishop of Antioch, and held a Council in that City, wherein they declared, that they would embrace the Faith of the Council of Nice, and receive the Term, Consubstantial; But at the same time they add, that this Term must be understood in the sense, which signifies, that the Son of God was begotten of the Substance of his Father, and that he is like in Substance to his Father; that we must not believe that there was any Passion in this ineffable Generation; that we must not make use of the Word, Substance, according to the natural sense of this Term; that it was not us'd but to destroy the Error of Arius, who said, that the Word was made out of nothing, an Error which was revived by the Anomæans. These Bishops having made this Declaration in their Letter to the Emperor, approve the whole and entire Creed of the Council of Nice. Of Antioch &c. 1363.

Of the Council of Lampsacus.

Of Lampsacus. 365. HYpatianus the Deputy of the Bishops of the Hellespont, desired a Council of the Emperors Valens and Valentinian. They appointed one at Lampsacus, where the Bishops assembled in the Year 365. After they had deliberated for the space of two Months what they should do, they null'd all that had been done at Constantinople by the Intriguing of Eudoxius and Acacius. They declared that the Son of God was like in Substance to his Father, and adher'd to that Profession of Faith which was made in the Synod of Antioch, while the Dedication of the Church of that City was celebrated. They ordain afterwards, that the Bishops depos'd by the Anomæans, should re-enter into their Churches, from which they had been unjustly forced away, and they appointed them for Judges the Orthodox Bishops of their Province, and some of those that were neareſt to it. They sent Deputies to Valens who was then at Heraclea; but they were not well receiv'd, because Eudoxius had prepossessed the Emperor, who ordain'd, that the Churches should be given to those of his Party. He oblig'd also Eleusius of Cyzicum, in a Synod held in the Year 366, to agree with Eudoxius; but this Bishop repented of it, and publickly testified the sorrow he had for being overcome by the Sollicitations of the Emperor. Of Singedunum. 366.

GErminius Biſhop of Sirmium made in 366. a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein he makes profeſſion of believing in Jeſus Chriſt the only Son of God, our Lord and our God, the true Son of God, of the true Father, God, begotten before all Worlds, like in all things to his Father, in Divinity, in Majeſty, in Greatneſs, in Power, and in Wiſdom. This Confeſſion of Faith diſpleas'd Urſacius, Valens, and the other Arian Biſhops, who deſired of him an Account of his Faith. The only Anſwer that he made to them was, that he would not ſeparate from them: Wherefore they aſſembled at Singedunum a City of Mœſia, and from thence wrote to him to diſſuade him from maintaining that that the Son of God was in all things like his Father. This Letter is preſerved in the Fragments of St. Hilary. 'Tis dated December 16th. in the Year 366. Germinius anſwer'd them, That he made Profeſſion of believing the Son of God to be in all things like to his Father, except the Innaſcibility, God of God, Light of Light, Begotten before all Ages, who is not made of nothing, but begotten of God his Father. In ſhort he ſays, that he does not depart from the Creed drawn up by Marcus of Arethuſa, which had been formerly ſign'd by Urſacius and Valens.

Of the Synods held by the Semi-Arians.

The Synods of 365. & 366.

THE Biſhops who were call'd Semi-Arians, aſſembled many Councils after the Synod of Lampſacus: They held one at Smyrna compoſed of the Biſhops of Aſia, one in the Province of Pamphylia, another in Iſauria, and one in Lycia. Theſe Councils wrote Letters not now extant, that were carried to Pope Liberius by Euſtathius the Deputy of theſe Biſhops, who ſent him into the Weſt to make a Reconciliation with thoſe who made Profeſſion of adhering to the Nicene Creed. Euſtathius diſcharged his Deputation, approv'd the Nicene Creed, and obtained Letters of Commendation from Liberius. He brought theſe Letters to a Synod which was held in Sicily, wherein the Faith of the Conſubſtantiality was approved; and returning afterwards into the Eaſt, he receiv'd the Letters of a Synod of Illyricum held in the Year 367, which declared the Trinity to be Conſubſtantial, and particularly eſtabliſhed the Divinity of the Holy Spirit. The Letter of this Council is related by Theodoret B. IV. of his Hiſtory. About the End of this Letter the Biſhops of this Council exhort thoſe of the Eaſt to chooſe for filling up the vacant Biſhopricks, either the Children of Biſhops which were dead, if they found them capable, or the ancient Prieſts, and not to ordain for Prieſts or Deacons ſuch Perſons as came out of the Palace or the Army, but to take them out of the inferior Clergy. The Deciſion of this Synod was confirm'd by an Edict of the Emperor, addreſs'd to the Aſiaticks, wherein he declares that the Term Conſubſtantial, ſignifies not only that the Son is like to his Father, but that he is of the ſame Nature and the ſame Subſtance.

Of Tyana. 368.

EUſtathius being returned from the Eaſt with Letters of Commendation from the Weſtern Biſhops, came to a Synod aſſembled at Tyana in the Year 368, compoſed of the Biſhops who had declared in Jovian's time, that it was neceſſary to maintain the Faith of the Conſubſtantiality. Euſtathius having read there the Letter of Liberius and the other Weſtern Biſhops, was there admitted to Communion, and the Anomœans were reconciled to the Semi-Arians. A Synod was appointed at Tarſus; but the Emperor Valens hindred its Meeting there, and cauſed one to be held in Caria, wherein the Term Conſubſtantial was rejected.

Of Gangra. 370.

THE preciſe time of this Council is not known. Some have thought that it was held between the Council of Antioch and that of Nice. Others following the Teſtimony of Socrates and Sozomen, place it after the Council of Seleucia. This Opinion is confirmed, becauſe that Euſebius who firſt ſign'd the Canons of this Council, was probably the Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, the Predeceſſor of St. Baſil, who held the See of this Church from the Year 362, to the Year 371. This Council condemns the Errors of one Euſtathius who is different from the Biſhop of Sebaſtea, who under pretence of leading a more perfect and auſtere Life, eſtabliſhed ſuch Practices as were contrary to the Laws of the Church. In the Letter of the Synod, he and his Followers are accus'd, firſt, Of condemning Marriage, and parting Wives from their Huſbands; ſecondly, Of forſaking the Publick Aſſemblies of the Church to keep private Meetings; thirdly, Of reſerving the Oblations for themſelves only; fourthly, Of parting Servants from their Maſters, and Children from their Fathers, under pretence of making them lead a more auſtere Life; fifthly, Of permitting Women to be habited like Men; ſixthly, Of deſpiſing the Faſts of the Church, and obſerving others, according to their own Fancy, even on Sundays; ſeventhly, Of believing that it was forbidden in all times to eat Meat; eighthly, Of rejecting the Oblations of married Prieſts; ninthly, Of deſpiſing Holy Places, and the Tombs of the Martyrs; tenthly, Of believing that none can be ſav'd without parting with all their Goods. Theſe Errors are condemned in twenty Canons, which have been placed in the Code of the Canons of the Univerſal Church.

Of Gangra. 370.

The 1ſt. condemns thoſe who diſallow Marriage, and believe that a married Perſon cannot be ſav'd.

The 2d. thunders an Anathema againſt thoſe who condemn ſuch as eat Fleſh, excepting only the Blood of thoſe things that have been offered to Idols, and things ſtrangled.

The 3d. is againſt thoſe who teach their Slaves to deſpiſe their Maſters, inſtead of ſerving them with reſpect.

The 4th. is againſt thoſe who ſay, we muſt not take the Communion from the hand of a married Prieſt.

The 5th. is againſt thoſe who deſpiſe the Houſe of God, and the Aſſemblies there kept.

The 6th. condemns thoſe who would have another than the Publick Church, who deſpiſe it, and would have the Eccleſiaſtical Functions performed without a Prieſt approved by the Biſhop.

The 7th. and 8th. are againſt thoſe who receive the Eccleſiaſtical Offerings out of the Church, without the conſent of the Biſhop, or of thoſe whom he has entruſted.

The 19th. is against those who break the Fasts of the Church without Necessity, and in Contempt.

The 20th. pronounces an Anathema against those who abhor the Assemblies and the Sacrifices which are made in honour of the Martyrs, and despise their Memories.

The Councils.

At last, the Fathers of this Council conclude with these excellent Words: 'We ordain these things not 'to exclude those who would, according to the Ad'vices of Holy Scripture, exercise themselves in the 'Church by these Practices of Continence and Piety, 'but against those who use these kinds of Austeri'ties for a Pretence to satisfy their Ambition, who 'despise those who lead an ordinary Life, and who 'introduce Innovations contrary to Scripture and the 'Ecclesiastical Laws. We admire Virginity when 'it is accompanied with Humility; we praise Ab'stinence which is joyn'd with Piety and Prudence. 'We respect that Retirement which is made with 'Humility; but we also honour Marriage. We do 'not blame Riches when they are in the hands of 'Persons that are just and beneficent; we esteem 'those who cloath themselves modestly, without 'Pride and Affectation, and we abhor uncivil and 'voluptuous Apparel: We have a Reverence for 'Churches, and we approve the Assemblies which 'are there made as Holy and Useful: We do not con'fine Piety to Houses: We honour all Places built 'to the Name of God: We approve the Assem'blies which are kept in the Church for the pub'lick Good: We praise the Largesses which the 'Faithful give to the Church to be distributed a'mong the Poor. In a word, We wish and desire 'that these things may be observ'd in the Church 'which we have learn'd from the Scripture and the 'Tradition of the Apostles.

Of the Council of Laodicea.

Of Laodicea between 360 and 370.

IT has been commonly believed, that this Council was more ancient than that of Nice, but the Regulations which are contain'd in its Canons, do sufficiently discover, that it was held at a time, wherein the Church flourished, and had been a long time delivered from the Pagan Persecutions; which shows that this Council could not have been assembled before the middle of the Fourth Century. 'Tis very probable that it was celebrated between 360 and 370. We know nothing of its History; but we have 60 Canons of this Assembly, which regulate many considerable Points of Ecclesiastical Discipline, and have been received by the whole Church, and put into the Code of the Canons of the Universal Church.

The 1st. of these Canons declares, that by a kind of Condescention, the Communion ought to be given to those who are married a second time, after they have for some time given themselves to Fasting and Prayer.

The 2d. is, that the Communion ought to be given to those Sinners who have done Penance for their Crimes.

The 3d. is, that those ought not to be promoted to a Bishoprick who were lately baptiz'd.

The 4th. that Clergymen ought not to be Usurers.

The 5th. that Ordination should not be made in the presence of those who are in the Rank of Hearers.

The 6th. that Hereticks should not be suffered to enter into the House of the Lord.

The 7th. that in order to the receiving of Hereticks, such as the Novatians, the Photinians, the Quarto Decimani, they ought first to abjure and anathematize all Heresies, and chiefly that whereof they made Profession; and then after they are instructed in our Doctrine, they ought to be anointed with Chrism; and lastly, made Partakers of the Holy Mysteries.

The 8th. that they must be wholly baptiz'd a-new who come from the Sect of the Montanists.

The 9th. that the Faithful ought to be forbidden to go to the Cœmiteries or Churches of Hereticks to pray there with them, and that those who do it ought to be excommunicated, and do Penance for their Fault.

Of Laodicea between 360 and 370.

The 10th. that Catholicks should not give their Daughters in Marriage to Hereticks.

The 17th. that many Psalms should not be read together, but between every Psalm a Lesson.

The 18th. that the same Prayers should be read at Mattins as at Vespers.

The 19th. that after the Bishop's Sermon, the Prayers of the Catechumens shall be read apart by themselves, and when these are gone forth, then shall be the Prayer of the Penitents; and lastly, after these have withdrawn having received Imposition of Hands, the Prayer of the Faithful shall be made at three times successively: That the first Prayer shall be made in silence, but the second and third Prayers shall be pronounced with a loud Voice, and after that, the Peace shall be given; that when the Priests shall give it to the Bishop, the Laity shall give it to themselves, and afterwards the Oblation shall go on till it be finished; and that none but those who are Holy shall be suffered to approach the Altar to receive the Communion.

The 20th. forbids Deacons to sit in the presence of a Priest without his leave, and it ordains likewise, that the other Ministers and all the inferior Clergy shall shew the same respect to Deacons.

The 21st. forbids Ministers to do the Offices of Deacons, and to touch the Holy Vessels.

The 22d. and 23d. forbid Ministers and Readers to carry the Stole.

The Councils.

The 60th. and laſt Canon contains an Enumeration of the Canonical Books of the Old and New Teſtament. It places in the number of the Canonical Books of the Old Teſtament thoſe which the Jews acknowledged; and in this number it places Eſther, Job, and Ruth, but not Tobit, Judith, Eccleſiaſticus, Wiſdom, nor the Books of the Maccabees. Of the Council of Rome under Damaſus.

Of Rome, &c. 370.

IN the Year 370, Pope Damaſus aſſembled a Council at Rome, in whoſe Name a Synodical Letter was written againſt the Arians, produced in Greek by Theodoret, B. VI. of his Hiſtory, Ch. 23. and by Sozomen B. II. Ch. 22. and publiſhed in Latin by Holſtenius. It is addreſs'd to the Biſhops of Illyricum, and not to the Biſhops of the Eaſt, ſince theſe laſt are mentioned in the third Perſon. This Synod confirms the Faith of the Council of Nice; and declares that Auxentius Biſhop of Milan was condemned by the Biſhops of France. It excommunicates thoſe who do not believe that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are one and the ſame Divinity, and one and the ſame Subſtance. It obſerves, that the Council of Ariminum could not prejudice the Deciſions of the Council of Nice, becauſe thoſe who made the Creed of Ariminum, proteſted afterwards againſt what they had done, and alſo becauſe neither the Biſhop of Rome, whoſe Judgment was chiefly to be waited for, nor Vincentius of Capua, nor many other Biſhops, did ever conſent to the Deciſion of the Council of Ariminum. Laſtly, they ſay, that they hope that the Biſhops, who hold not the Doctrine eſtabliſhed by the Nicene Creed, ſhould quickly be deprived of their Biſhopricks, and they exhort the Biſhops of Illyricum conſtantly to defend the true Faith.

Of Rome, &c. 372.

THIS Council was held in the Year 372. againſt Urſicinus the Anti-pope. In it the Aſſociates of this pretended Biſhop are condemned, and among others Florentius of Puteoli, and the Biſhop of Parma.

Of the Council of Valence.

Of Valence 374.

IN the Year 374, Phœbadius or Fegadius Bishop of Agen, and 20 Bishops more, assembled at Valence to settle some Commotions of this Church, and having regulated the Affair they made four Canons for the Reformation of Discipline.

In the first they forbid those to be Ordained for the future who have been twice Married, or those who have espous'd a Widow, whether they did it before or since their Baptism: But they do not meddle with the Ordinations of Bigamists made before their Decision, lest they should disturb the Church.

In the second Canon they ordain, that Penance shall not immediately be allowed to those Virgins, who married after they had made a Vow of Virginity, and that they shall not be receiv'd until they have made full Satisfaction.

The third Canon delays Absolution of those till death, who having been baptized, did partake in the profane Sacrifices of Devils, and exhorts them in the mean time to do Penance for their Fault, and to wait for the Remission of it from the Mercy of God.

In the last place they declare, that all those Deacons, Priests, and Bishops must be deposed, who confess themselves guilty of some great Crime, whether they did really commit it, or only accuse themselves falsly of it. There is a Letter prefixed to these Canons, wherein they address to the Bishops of the five Provinces, and of Gaul, after which there follows another Letter written to the Church of Frejus, wherein the Synod acquaints it, that tho' the Bishop Concordius had spoken in behalf of one Acceptus, who probably had accus'd himself of some Crime whereof he was not guilty, yet the Synod did not think fit to make an Exception in his favour from the general Rule which they had made. To give a Reason of this Rule they add, that tho' they knew that many Persons accuse themselves of those Crimes which they have not committed, from the dread they have of the Priesthood, yet Men being more inclined to judge ill than well, they thought fit that all those who had said ill of themselves should be removed from the Priesthood, whether it were true or false; for fear of giving occasion of Disputes, by those Accusations which might be urged against the Ministers of Jesus Christ of such Crimes, whereof they might be convicted by their own Testimony. This Synod consisted of 21 Bishops. Phœbadius of Agen is the first; in it there is found also the names of Rhodanius of Tholouse, of Justus of Lyons, of Britto of Triers, of Florentius of Vienna, and of Concordius of Arles. 'Tis observed in some Manuscripts, that it consisted of 30 Bishops, but perhaps this number ought to be corrected, by making it 21.

Of the Council of Antioch for restoring Peace in that Church.

Of Antioch 378.

THE Church of Antioch for a long time had been rent in pieces with Divisions. After the Deposition of the Great Eustathius, some rigid Catholicks had always maintain'd themselves without a Bishop, till Lucifer ordain'd one Paulinus; but the greatest part of the Catholicks acknowledged Meletius for their lawful Bishop. The East favoured this last, Egypt and the West adher'd to Paulinus. St. Basil us'd all his Endeavours in vain to reconcile them, for he could not compass it; but nine Months after his death, as is observ'd by St. Gregory Nyssen in the Life of St. Macrina, in the Year 378, a Council was held at Antioch, wherein the two Parties were reconciled, upon condition that no Bishop should be ordain'd in his room who should die first, but the Survivor should continue sole Bishop. Theodoret says, that Paulinus would not accept this Condition, but the Bishops of Italy affirm the contrary in the Letter of the Council of Aquileia, and in the fifth Letter of the Council of Italy. There was receiv'd in this Synod a Confession of Faith sent from the West, which is call'd the Tome of the West, as it is declar'd in the Fifth Canon of the Council of Constantinople. 'Tis probable, that this Tome is either the Synodical Letter of Damasus, or the Anathematisms which follow it. Baronius says, that Deputies were named in this Council, and he grounds this Conjecture upon a Passage of St. Gregory Nyssen, who says, that he was deputed by a Council; but it cannot be known at present, whether he speaks of this Council or of another.

In short, Valesius attributes to this Council the Letter 69 of St. Basil, written by several Bishops, to the Bishops of Italy and France, wherein mention is made of a Writing of the Bishops of the West: but this Conjecture cannot be maintain'd, since there are among the Bishops, in whose Name this Letter was written, the Names of St. Basil Bishop of Cæsarea, and Theodotus of Nicopolis, who were dead when the Synod, which we now speak of, was held; besides that there is no mention in it of the Reconciliation of Meletius and Paulinus, which was not till after the death of St. Basil.

Of Antioch 378.

Of the Councils of Constantinople.

Of the First &c. 381.

FOR the better understanding the History of the Council of Constantinople, which is called the Second General Council, we must distinguish three Assemblies of Bishops held at Constantinople at three several times.

The first was held in the Month of May in the Year 381. It was compos'd of all the Bishops of the Eastern Empire except Egypt. Meletius of Antioch presided in the Assembly, and confirmed St. Gregory Nazianzen in the See of the Church of Constantinople. There is some probability that in this Synod the Canon was made, wherein the Election of Maximus is condemned, who endeavoured to invade the See of the Church of Constantinople, and also the Canon wherein the second place of Honour is granted to the Bishop of Constantinople. However this be, Meletius died before the end of this Synod, his Body was carried back to Antioch, and the Eastern Bishops chose in his room Flavianus contrary to the Promise that was made while Meletius was alive, that no Person should succeed in the room of the Bishop that died first.

Of the First &c. 381.

Of the Second Council of Constantinople.

Of the Second &c. 382.

WHEN Flavian was ordain'd, the Eastern Bishops returned to Constantinople, at the beginning of the Year 382. They were never after so favourable to Gregory Nazianzen, because he reprehended the Ordination of Flavianus, as a thing contrary to the Agreement that was made; and therefore this Saint had no sooner proposed to withdraw, but almost all the Bishops consented to it. After his retirement, the Council ordained Nectarius Bishop of Constantinople. 'Tis to this Synod that the Canon and Creed of the General Council of Constantinople are attributed. In it was read the Letter of the Western Bishops assembled at Aquileia, wherein they desire that a General Council of the East and

The Councils.

Weſt may be held at Alexandria. The Eaſtern Biſhops anſwer'd, that they could not go farther off, and they only ſent three Deputies into the Weſt, to acquaint them with their deſires of Peace, and to inform them of the truth of their Doctrine.

The Weſtern Biſhops being diſſatisfied with this, and with what was ordain'd in the Council of Conſtantinople, complained to the Emperor, firſt, that they had ordained Flavianus in the Room of Meletius, contrary to the Promiſe made while he was alive; ſecondly, that they had ordain'd Nectarius Biſhop of Conſtantinople without any regard to Maximus who had been ordain'd by the Patriarch; thirdly, that they had avoided the Calling of a General Council, that they might hold one at Conſtantinople. At laſt, they pray that a General Council may meet at Rome to determine all Differences: For ſay they, 'tis fit that the Eaſtern Biſhops ſhould not deſpiſe the Judgment of the Biſhop of Rome, and the Biſhops of Italy, ſince they have waited for the Judgment of Aſcelius of Theſſalonica. We do not, add they, aſſume to our ſelves the Prerogative of this Examination, but we expect to have a part in the Judgment, becauſe the Judgment ought to be common to all thoſe who are of one and the ſame Communion. The Councils.

Of the Third Council of Conſtantinople.

Of the Third of Conſtantinople. 383.

THIS Letter from thoſe of the Weſt, was deliver'd in the Year 383, to a Synod aſſembled at Conſtantinople, whereof Nectarius was Preſident. The Biſhops of this Council made Anſwer, that they wiſhed they could be preſent at Rome to treat thereof the Affairs of the Church; but not being able to do it leſt they ſhould leave their Churches in a forlorn condition, they thought it would be ſufficient to give them an account of all that they had ordain'd. They ſay therefore, that they have approved the Creed of the Council of Nice, that they admit one and the ſame Divine Majeſty in three Perſons, that as to the Incarnation they have a very Orthodox Doctrine, being perſuaded that Jeſus Chriſt took a Body, Soul and Spirit, and that he is a perfect Man. They prove that this is their Doctrine by the Tome of the Weſt, which they approved at the Synod of Antioch. As to the manner of Governing the Churches, they declare, that according to the Canons of the Council of Nice, they believed that the Biſhop of each Province, ought to ordain the Biſhops of their own Province, and call in to their Aſſiſtance their Neighbours alſo, if they thought fit: That according to this Law Nectarius was ordained Biſhop of Conſtantinople in the General Synod, with the conſent of the People and Clergy of Conſtantinople, and in the preſence of the Emperor; that after the ſame manner Flavianus was ordain'd by all the Biſhops of the Province and of the Dioceſs of the Eaſt, and that St. Cyril was ſome time ago ordain'd Biſhop of Jeruſalem by the Biſhops of the Province. They exhort the Weſtern Church to approve of what they had done, and do admoniſh them to preferr the Edification of the Church, before the Inclinations they might have to any particular Perſons, that ſo they might re-eſtabliſh a perfect Union among all the Members of the Church. This is what is contained in the Letter of this Synod related by Theodoret. This Council is not different from that mention'd by Socrates, Ch. 10. of B. V. of his Hiſtory, and by Sozomen, Ch. 12. of B. VII. In which were preſent the chief Biſhops of all the Sects, ready to defend their own Opinions: But Nectarius confounded them all, by asking them if they would refer themſelves to the ancient Catholick Authors, who lived before the beginning of theſe Diſputes: For ſome being willing to accept of theſe Terms, and others refuſing to do it, the Emperor who ſaw them divided, deſired of every one their Confeſſion of Faith, and when they had preſented them to him, he tore all thoſe in which there was not Profeſſion made of believing the Conſubſtantial Trinity, and made an Edict againſt all Hereſies.

The Creed of the Council of Conſtantinople is not very different from that of Nice. The Fathers of this Council have only added ſome more expreſs Terms, to denote the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, by calling him, The quickning Lord who proceedeth from the Father, who is to be worſhipped and glorified together with the Father and the Son, who ſpake by the Prophets. They make Profeſſion alſo, of believing one only Holy and Apoſtolick Church, of confeſſing one Baptiſm only for the Remiſſion of Sins, of looking for the Reſurrection of the Dead, and the Life of the World to come. This Creed was not at firſt received by all Churches, and there were ſome that would add nothing to the Nicene Creed. For this cauſe it was perhaps, that no other Creed but that of Nice was read in the Council of Epheſus, and there it was alſo forbidden to make uſe of any other: But this of Conſtantinople was authentically approved in the Council of Chalcedon, where it was read after that of Nice. Of the Third of Conſtantinople. 383.

It was a long time before the Canons of this Council were approved by the Weſtern Biſhops: Not only St. Leo rejected them in his Epiſtle 53, now the 80, but alſo Gelaſius in his Epiſtle to Dardanus, and St. Gregory in his Epiſtle 25 of B. VI. rejects them, as not being received in the Weſt; but however, they have been received in the Eaſt, and are put in the Code of the Canons of the Univerſal Church. 'Tis not eaſy to tell how many Canons were made in the Three Councils of Conſtantinople, whereof we have juſt now ſpoken, nor to which of the three they are to be attributed, and whether they were all made in one and the ſame Synod. The Verſion of Dionyſius Exiguus contains but three of them; but the ſecond contains that which is the third in the Greek, and the laſt is reckon'd for the fourth which concerns the Ordination of Maximus. But the Code of the Canons of the Univerſal Church adds to theſe a fifth, which concerns the Tome of the Weſtern Biſhops, a ſixth about the Form of Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions, and a ſeventh concerning the manner of receiving Hereticks. Photius, Zonaras, Balſamon, and the other Greeks, acknowledged theſe laſt Canons, and attribute them to the Council of Conſtantinople, ſo that there can be no Queſtion but they were made by one of thoſe three Councils of which we have ſpoken, but it is more probable that they were made by the laſt. Firſt, Becauſe Dionyſius Exiguus has not put them in his Collection of Canons; Secondly, Becauſe Socrates and Sozomen mention only the four firſt when they ſpeak of the firſt and ſecond Council of Conſtantinople; Thirdly, Becauſe 'tis plain that theſe Canons are an Addition, or Supplement to the three other Canons; Fourthly, Becauſe it appears that the fifth Canon was made by ſome Biſhops, who had a Confeſſion of Faith of the Biſhops of the Weſt, which they call a Tome, and which they aprov'd. Now the Biſhops of the third Council of Conſtantinople ſpeak of this Confeſſion in their Letter to the Biſhops of the Weſt, and give it the Name of a Tome; which ſhows that the fifth Canon and this Letter were from the ſame hand. Laſtly, Nicholas the I. in his Letter to the Emperor Michael, cites the ſixth Canon of this Council, as belonging to the Council of Conſtantinople; but he obſerves that it is not to be found in his Code of the Canons. Theſe Reaſons ſhew, that the four firſt Canons of the Council of Conſtantinople belong to the firſt and ſecond Synods, but rather to the firſt than the ſecond, becauſe of the fourth which is againſt the Ordination of Maximus, and that the three following belong to the third Synod held in 383.

The firſt of theſe Canons confirms the Creed of the Council of Nice, and pronounces an Anathema againſt all the Hereſies that are contrary to it, eſpecially againſt the Eunomians, the Anomœans, the Arians, rias, the Eudoxians, against the Semi-Arians who were Enemies to the Holy Spirit, against the Marcellians, the Photinians and Apollinarists.

The Councils.

The 2d. Canon consists of four Parts: In the first the Bishops of one Diocess are forbidden (taking the name of Diocess for many Provinces) to go out of their own Diocess; and 'tis ordained according to the Canons, that the Bishop of Alexandria shall govern Egypt only; that the Bishops of the East shall govern the East, saving always to the Church of Antioch its Privileges and Prerogatives, which are mentioned in the sixth Canon of the Council of Nice; that the Bishops of the Diocess of Asia shall regulate what concerns their own Diocess; that those of Thrace shall govern only the Churches of Thrace, and those of Pontus the Churches of Pontus.

The second Part forbids every Bishop in particular to go out of the Bounds of his own Country to ordain, or to meddle with the Affairs of the Churches in another Diocess.

The third ordains, that the Synod of every Province shall regulate what concerns its own Province, as had been ordain'd by the Council of Nice.

The last Part declares, that the Churches which are among the Barbarians, that's to say, those that are without the Roman Empire, shall be governed according to their ancient Customs, because in these Countries there is no distinction of Diocesses or Provinces.

The 3d. Canon grants to the Bishop of Constantinople the first Place of Honour next to the Bishop of Rome: Some have pretended that this Canon is to be extended to Jurisdiction; but this Explication is contrary to the Terms in which it is conceiv'd, and was never approv'd by Practice, tho' the Bishop of Constantinople, taking occasion of this Prerogative of Honour, endeavoured afterwards to usurp the Diocesses of Thrace, of Asia, and of Pontus, which at last were subjected to him by the Determination of the Council of Chalcedon. The Reader may see this more largely explained in the first Dissertation about the ancient Discipline of the Church.

The 4th. Canon declares, that Maximus was never Bishop, that his Ordinations are null, and that all that he did ought to be made void.

The 5th. Canon, which is the first of those of the third Council, approves the Tome of the Bishops of the West, and of those of Antioch who acknowledge one and the same Divinity in the three Persons of the Trinity. There is also mention made of this Tome in the Council's Letter, and it is probable that this was the Synodical Letter of Damasus sent to the Council of Antioch held in the Year 378. The Councils.

The 6th Canon regulates the Form of Ecclesiastical Decisions, and ordains, first, that all sorts of Persons shall not be admitted to accuse Bishops of Crimes which concern Religion; that no Hereticks, Schismaticks, Persons excommunicated, condemned, and in a word, all those that are separated from the Communion of Bishops shall be allowed to do it. Secondly, that the Accusation of a Bishop shall be carried to the Bishops of his own Province. Thirdly, that if the Bishops of the Province cannot judge of the Crimes whereof a Bishop is accus'd, recourse must be had to the Synod of the Diocess. Fourthly, that those who accuse a Bishop, ought in writing to subject themselves to the same Penalty, to which they expose him that is accus'd, if they be convicted of Calumny. Lastly, that if any one slighting these Laws, shall address himself either to the Emperor or to Secular Judges, or shall desire a General Council, without acquiescing in the Judgment of the Bishops of the Diocess, he ought to be heard no longer, since he has violated the Canons, and overthrown the Discipline of the Church.

The last Canon is concerning the manner of receiving Hereticks, who offer themselves to return into the Bosom of the Church. It ordains, that the Arians, Macedonians, Sabbatians, Novatians, Quartodecimani, Tetratites and Apollinarists, shall be receiv'd after they have made Profession of Faith, and anathematiz'd their Errors, By the Unction of the Holy Spirit, and the Chrism wherewith they shall be anointed on the Forehead, the Eyes, the Hands, the Mouth, the Ears, at the pronouncing of these Words: This is the Seal of the Holy Spirit. As to the Eunomians, the Montanists, the Sabellians, and all the other Hereticks, the Council ordains, that they shall be received like Pagans; that's to say, that at first they shall receive imposition of hands to give them the Name of Christians, that afterwards they shall be plac'd in the rank of Catechumens; that they shall be exorcis'd by blowing three times upon their Faces, and into their Ears; that they shall be catechiz'd, and that for a long time they shall be permitted to hear only the Holy Scripture in the Church; and at last they shall be baptized.

Of Aquileia 381.

THE Council of Aquileia was assembled in the Month of September of the Year 381. It should have been compos'd of the Bishops of the East and West; but St. Ambrose having declared that it was needless to weary the Eastern Bishops with such a Journey, none but the Western Bishops were obliged to come thither, and those of the East were only left at their Liberty to come there if they thought fit. There were about thirty Bishops present at the Council, together with the Deputies of the Bishops of France and Africa. Valerian was President. In it two Bishops of Dacia and Mœsia, nam'd Palladius and Secundianus, were accus'd of Arianism; there was read to them before the Council, a Letter of Arius, but they would neither approve, nor condemn it; and answered only, that they should see in two Days time, that they were both Catholicks. This Day being come they appeared before the Council; but they would not acknowledge it for a Judge, desiring a General Council compos'd of the Eastern and Western Bishops; nevertheless they examined them, convicted them of the Heresy of Arius, and condemned them. The Acts of this Council, the Letter which they wrote to the Bishops of France and Spain, to thank them for the Deputies they had sent, and the Letter address'd to the Emperors, wherein there is an account of what they had done, and prays them to hinder the Hereticks from entring into the Church, are still extant: It complains afterwards of the Crimes of an Arian Bishop nam'd Valens; and Lastly, it supplicates the Emperors to hinder the Assemblies of the Photinians. All these Monuments are extant in St. Ambrose. Of Aquileia 381.

The Bishops of this Council wrote also a Letter to the Emperor, praying him to drive away Ursicinus, which was publish'd by Sirmondus, and is in the Second Volume of the Councils, p. 998.

They wrote also a Letter which is found in the same place, in which they give the Emperor an Account of the State of the Eastern Empire, they thank him for restoring to the Catholicks the Eastern Churches; but they complain that many things were chang'd there, and that those were not kindly us'd who had always been in the Communion of the Western Churches, as Timotheus of Alexandria and Paulinus of Antioch. They pray that a general Council may be assembled at Alexandria, to examine those who ought to be admitted into Communion, and those to whom Communion must be denied. This Letter was delivered to the Emperor, at the time of the Second Council of Constantinople, and was read in this Council.

At last, when the Bishops understood what had been done in the East without consulting them, concerning the Ordination of Flavianus and Nectarius, they complained of it by another Letter, whereof we have already spoken, preserved in the same Volume of the Councils, p. 345. They testifie also by a Fourth Letter which precedes these, how much they could have wiſhed that the Council which they deſired had been held, and how neceſſary it would have been. Theſe Letters do not properly belong to the Council of Aquileia, but were written ſome time after in the name of thoſe Biſhops which were there aſſembled, and for executing what they had order'd. For which reaſon, it was thought neceſſary to mention them here.

The Councils.

Of Saragoſa. 381.

WHile the Biſhops of Italy were thus labouring to procure the Peace of the Church of Rome, thoſe of Spain were no leſs buſied in allaying the Commotions which were rais'd upon occaſion of Priſcillian and his Diſciples. The Council of Saragoſa was aſſembled upon this account about the Year 381, where having condemned Priſcillian and his Followers, they made ſome Canons againſt their Practices.

The 1ſt. forbids Women to meddle with Teaching and Expounding Articles of Faith.

The 2d. pronounces an Anathema againſt thoſe who faſted on Sundays from a ſuperſtitious or falſe Principle; and againſt thoſe who entred not into the Churches during Lent, but hid themſelves in their Houſes or in the Fields.

The 3d. anathematizes thoſe who having receiv'd the Euchariſt did not eat it in the Church.

The 4th. forbids any to be abſent from the Church from the 17th. of December until the Ephiphany.

Of Saragoſa. 381.

The 5th. forbids Biſhops under pain of Excommunication to receive thoſe who are excommunicated by their own Biſhops.

The 6th. declares, that thoſe of the Clergy muſt be caſt out of the Church, who abandon the Miniſtry out of vanity to turn Monks.

The 7th. declares, that it is not lawful for any to take to himſelf the Title and Name of Doctor, but only thoſe to whom it is granted.

The 8th. forbids Virgins to be veiled, that are devoted to Jeſus Chriſt, except they be forty Years old.

'Tis eaſy to perceive that all theſe Canons are made againſt the Priſcillianiſts, who affected a ſingular Way of Living.

Of the Council of Sida in Pamphylia.

Of Sida &c. 383

SF. Amphilochius aſſembled in 383, a Council of 25 Biſhops at Sida, a City of Pamphylia, againſt the Hereſy of the Maſſalians or the Euchaitæ. This Council condemned the Errors of theſe Hereticks, and wrote a Synodical Letter to Flavianus Biſhop of Antioch: It is not now extant. Photius had read it, and he tells us of it in Volume 52 of his Bibliotheca.

The ſame Photius ſpeaks in this place of a Synod held againſt theſe Hereticks at Antioch by Flavianus. There were preſent in it three Biſhops and 30 Prieſts and Deacons of the Church of Antioch. There Adelphius a Ring-leader of the Hereſy of the Maſſalians was condemned, and they would not receive him tho' he ſhould have abjur'd his Hereſy, becauſe they were perſuaded that he would not do it ſincerely, theſe Hereticks making no ſcruple of renouncing their Doctrine with their mouth. Flavianus ſent an account to the Oſroënians of what paſs'd in this Synod.

Of the Council of Bourdeaux.

Of Bourdeaux, 383.

THIS Council was aſſembled by the Order of the Emperor Maximus, and condemned Inſtancius a Follower of Priſcillian and had condemned Priſcillian himſelf if he had not appeal'd to the Emperor. See what we have ſaid upon this Subject p. 191. 'Tis ſaid, that afterwards there was a Council held at Triers where St. Martin was preſent. But this Aſſembly of Biſhops who came to Court to deſire the Condemnation of the Priſcillianiſts, deſerves not the Name of a Council. See Sulpitius Severus's Account of it in his Dialogues of the Life of St. Martin. The ſame Sulpitius Severus, at the end of his Second Dialogue, mentions a Council held at Niſmes in St. Martin's time, but he acquaints us with nothing that paſs'd in it.

Of Capua, 390

THE Council of Capua was aſſembled by the Emperor Valentinian in the Year 390, to determine the Difference which was between Flavianus and Evagrius, the Succeſſor of Paulinus in the See of Antioch. In it Theophilus of Alexandria and the Biſhops of Ægypt were named for Judges of this Cauſe. But Flavianus would not acknowledge them for Judges, and told the Emperor boldly, who had order'd him to come to Conſtantinople, that he might ſend him to Alexandria. Sir, if they accuſe my Manners or my Faith, I am ready to ſubmit my ſelf to the Judgment of my Accuſers themſelves; but if they would have my Primacy and See, I will have no diſpute with any body about it, neither will I reſiſt thoſe who aſpire to this Dignity; And therefore give the See of Antioch to whom you pleaſe. This reſolute Anſwer made the Emperor wonder, who ſent him back to Antioch to govern his Church. But tho' the Synod of Capua had not been aſſembled but for this Affair, yet in it they treated of other things. Bonoſus a Biſhop was informed againſt there, becauſe he had the boldneſs to affirm that the Virgin Mary had Children by Joſeph after the birth of Jeſus Chriſt. The Council referr'd this Cauſe to Anyſius Biſhop of Theſſalonica, and the other Biſhops of Macedonia. They forbid him to enter into his Church. This Biſhop being diſgraced by this Judgment, conſulted St. Ambroſe, whether it were lawful for him to enter into it. This Saint anſwered him, that he ought to do nothing contrary to the Judgment given by the Biſhops of Macedonia: And they deſiring to ratify their Judgment by the Opinion of the Biſhop of Rome, wrote an account of it to Syricius, who anſwered them, That the Council of Capua having referr'd this Cauſe, it did not belong to him to judge of it, but to them to determine it. We learn all this from the Letter of Sirycius which was formerly attributed to St. Ambroſe.

Of Capua, 390.

This Synod treated alſo of Re-baptization, of Re-ordinations, and Tranſlations of Biſhops, as it is obſerv'd in the 48th. Canon of the Code of the Canons of the Church of Africa, which is conceiv'd in theſe Words, We have declared what was Ordained in the Council of Capua, That it was not lawful to uſe Re-baptization, Re-ordination and the Tranſlation of Biſhops. This is all we know of this Council.

The Councils.

Of Rome, &c. 390.

SIrycius condemned Jovinian and his Followers in a Synod of his Clergy, and his Condemnation was confirmed by a Synod of Milan. We have the Letters of these two Synods. In the first it is determined, that tho' we ought not to despise nor condemn Marriage, yet Virgins are more to be honoured. The second contains the Proofs of this truth, and in it is shown, that the Blessed Virgin lost not her Virginity by bringing forth Jesus Christ into the World.

Of the Council of the Novatians held at Sangarus.

Of Sangarus. 390.

SOcrates mentions in the 21st. Ch. of the 5th. B. of his History, a Council of the Novatians held at Sangarus about the End of this Century, wherein it was declared a thing indifferent to celebrate the Feast of Easter on Sunday or another day, against what was ordained in another Synod held before that at Pazus.

Of Sangarus 390.

Of the First Council of Carthage.

Of the first of Carthage. 348.

THO' this Council was celebrated in the Year 348. yet we have hitherto delayed to speak of it, that we might give an Idæa of all the African Councils of the Fourth Age together. This was a General Council of the African Bishops, and Gratus Bishop of Carthage who was present at the Council of Sardica, presided in it. He spoke first to his Brethren, and said, 'That we must first give 'thanks to God who hath put an End to the Schism, 'and inspired the Emperor Constantine, (it must be 'read Constans) to send Paulus and Macarius into 'Africa to procure Peace there, and for the Liberty 'which the African Bishops have enjoyed of meeting together in Provincial Councils, and assembling from all the Provinces of Africa; that afterwards we must examine the Heads, about which 'it will be necessary to make some Decrees, according to the Divine Laws, and the Instructions of 'Holy Scripture; but then we must have such a 'regard to this time of Peace, that we neither weaken the Obligation of the Laws, nor yet prejudice 'the present Unity by too much severity.

The 1st. Head which he proposed was about Rebaptization. He ask'd, whether that Man ought to be re-baptiz'd who at his Baptism made Profession of believing the Trinity. The Bishops answer'd: God forbid, We declare that this Re-baptization is unlawful, contrary to the Orthodox Faith and the Ecclesiastical Discipline.

The 2d. Head was to remedy the Abuse which the Donatists were guilty of in giving the Name of Martyrs to Fanaticks, who laid violent Hands on themselves, or threw themselves head-long from Precipices. Gratus was of Opinion, that they should be forbidden for the future to honour these false Martyrs, and that those Lay-men should be put under Penance, who meddled with Deposing of Clergymen. The Bishops approved his Opinion, and said, that the same was ordained in the Provincial Councils.

In the 3d. they forbid those Persons who profess Virginity, to cohabit or have any familiarity with any Persons of the other Sex, under the pain of Excommunication for the Laity, and of Deposition for the Clergy. The Reason which they give for this Law is excellent: We must, say they, shun the occasions of Sin, remove all kind of Suspicion, and avoid the Snares which the subtilty of the Devil uses to destroy simple Souls which are not upon their guard, under pretence of Charity and Love to our Neighbour.

The 4th. contains the same Prohibition to Widows.

In the 5th. the Bishop Privatus remonstrates, that a Bishop ought not to be permitted to receive a Clergyman belonging to another Bishop, unless he has the permission of his own Bishop; neither ought he to ordain a Lay-man of another Diocess without the consent of his own Bishop. He alledges the Authority of the Council of Sardica to prove that this Order ought to be observ'd.

Of the first of Carthage. 348.

In the next, another Bishop nam'd Nicasius remonstrates, that it does not become Clergymen to take upon them the charge of Secular Affairs. Gratus confirm'd this Remonstrance by the Authority of Scripture, and the Bishops approved it.

In the 7th. another Bishop propos'd, that a Priest or a Lay-man of another Diocess should not be receiv'd into Communion, unless he had a Letter from his own Bishop.

In the 8th. 'tis ordain'd after the Proposition made by Evagrius, and according to the Opinion of Gratus, that those shall not be ordained, who have been Guardians, or managed several other sorts of business, till their Accounts be made up and ended.

The 9th. forbids them to choose Clergymen to be Treasurers or Collectors of the Publick Taxes.

The 10th. forbids Bishops to invade the Bounds of the neighbouring Dioceses.

The 11th. regulates the numbers of Judges necessary to sit upon a Clergyman. A Deacon who is accus'd ought to be judg'd by three neighbouring Bishops, a Priest by six, and a Bishop ought not be judg'd by less than twelve.

In the 12th, Antigonus Bishop of Madaura complains, that after he had made and sign'd an Agreement with Optantius, (who probably was his Rival in the Bishoprick) by which they agreed to divide the People between them, yet this Optantius continued still, contrary to this Agreement, to win the Affections of the People. The Bishops decree that the Agreement should stand good.

In the 13th, Abundantius Bishop of Adrumetum says, that in the Council of his Province, Priests were forbidden to take Interest. Gratus represented that it was not necessary to make any Canon about this, that they needed only put the Law in Execution which was written in the Gospel; and that if Usury was to be condemned in Lay-men, it was much more damnable in Clergy-men. All the Bishops approv'd his Judgment.

The last Canon enjoyns Clergy-men and Lay-men to observe these Canons, and those which had been made by other Councils, under the pain of Excommunication for Lay-men, and Deposition for Clergymen.

Of the Second Council of Carthage.

Of the Second of Carthage. 390.

FRom the Inscription of this Council corrected by a Manuscript of the Vatican we learn, that it was assembled under the third Consulship of Valentinian and Neoterius, that's to say in the Year 390, on the 14th of June, at Carthage in the Church of St. Perpetua; that Genethlius Bishop of Carthage presided there, and that Bishops came thither from different Provinces. Genethlius opens the Council by giving giving thanks to God for the coming of the Biſhops to Carthage according to the Letters which he had written to them. He ſays, that tho' all the Biſhops were not preſent at this Council, yet it was to be believ'd that thoſe who were abſent were united in Spirit with it. He recommends afterwards to the Biſhops to defend the Faith of the Trinity.

The 2d. Canon renews the Law eſtabliſhed in the preceding Council concerning the Celibacy of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons.

The 3d. forbids Prieſts to bleſs the Chriſm, to conſecrate Virgins, and to reconcile Penitents at a Publick Maſs. This is one of the moſt ancient Monuments where the name of Maſs occurs to ſignify the publick Prayers which the Church made at offering the Euchariſt.

The 4th. Canon permits Prieſts to reconcile Penitents who are ſick and in Danger, with the Biſhop's leave.

The 5th. forbids the making new Biſhopricks without the leave of the Biſhop of the place.

The 6th. forbids the admitting any Perſons of bad Reputation as Accuſers of Biſhops.

The 7th. confirms the Rule made in many Councils, which forbids a Biſhop to receive a Perſon excommunicated by his own Biſhop.

The 8th. declares, that if a Prieſt excommunicated by his own Biſhop, undertake to offer up Sacrifices in private, and to ſet up Altar againſt Altar, thereby making a Schiſm, he ought to be anathematiz'd, becauſe there is but one Church, one Faith, and one Baptiſm. The Councils.

The 9th. forbids Prieſts to celebrate Maſs in all kinds of places: It is call'd in this place, Agenda.

The 10th. ordains, that a Biſhop accus'd, who would juſtify himſelf, if he cannot call together more, ought at leaſt to defend his Cauſe before twelve Biſhops, a Prieſt before ſix, and a Deacon before three, one of which ought to be their own Biſhop.

The 11th. forbids Biſhops to intermeddle in the Dioceſes of others.

The 12th. declares, that Biſhops ſhall not be ordained without the conſent of the Primate, that's to ſay, the Metropolitan, and that in a caſe of neceſſity three Biſhops are ſufficient to ordain a Biſhop, provided they have the conſent of the Metropolitan.

The 13th. is the concluſion of this Council, which ordains, that all the Biſhops ſhall obſerve the Canons which ſhall be ſign'd by all the Biſhops preſent. Some Criticks have doubted of the Truth of this Council, becauſe the Names of Aurelius and Alypius are found in it, who were not Biſhops when it was aſſembled: But theſe Names are not found in the Edition corrected by the Vatican Manuſcript, but in their places there are the Names of Genethlius and Felix.

Of Cabarſuſſa, &c. 393. 394.

THeſe two Councils are two Aſſemblies of Donatiſt Biſhops of the contrary Parties: In the firſt of which Primianus Head of one Party, Biſhop of Carthage, was depos'd, and Maximian in the ſecond. St. Auſtine quotes the Synodical Epiſtles of theſe two Councils; that of the firſt in the Commentary upon Pſal. 36. and that of the ſecond in divers places of his Books againſt Creſconius and Petilian. This Father ſays, that the firſt Council was held in the Year 393, and conſiſted of a 100 Biſhops; and yet there are but 43 in the Subſcriptions of the Council: The ſecond which was celebrated the next Year, conſiſted of 310 Biſhops. THis Council is mentioned in the Code of the Canons of the African Church, where it is obſerv'd, that it was held under the third Conſulſhip of Arcadius, and the ſecond of Honorius on the 24th of June, and that Deputies are nam'd in this Council to attend at the Council of Adrumetum. Of Carthage. 397.

UNder the Conſulſhip of Cæſarius and Atticus, who were Conſuls in the Year 397, according to the Vulgar Æra, the Biſhops deputed from the Provinces of Africa came to Carthage; but they were not all preſent there at the ſame time: Some came on the 26th. of Auguſt, a Day appointed for the Council, others came not till ſome time after. Nevertheleſs, Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage, having conferr'd with the Biſhops who came firſt, and received Letters from the Biſhops of the Provinces, who had not yet ſent their Deputies, caus'd the Canons which the Biſhops, with whom he had conferred, thought fit to make, and thoſe which were propos'd by Letters from the Biſhops of Byzacena, to be read to thoſe that were preſent. Theſe Canons were received in the Council, which confirmed thoſe which had been made in the Council of Hippo. Of Carthage. 397.

The 1ſt. Canon orders all the Churches of Africa, to inform themſelves every Year by the Biſhop of Carthage, on what Day Eaſter ſhould be celebrated.

The 2d. ordains, that every Year a Council ſhall meet, to which every one of the Provinces of Africa was to ſend three Deputies, excepting only the Province of Tripolis, which could ſend but one, becauſe of the ſmall number of Biſhops in that Province.

The 3d. requires, that the Canons ſhould be read to thoſe who were to be ordain'd, that they might not be ignorant of them.

The 4th. forbids the Ordination of Deacons, and Conſecration of Virgins before the Age of 25 Years, and forbids Readers to ſalute the People, that's to ſay, to addreſs any Speech to them, when they read the Goſpel in the Church.

The 5th. ordains, that the Sacraments ſhould not be given to the Catechumens during the Solemnity of Eaſter, but only the Salt which was uſually given them; becauſe if the Faithful do not change the Sacraments during theſe Feaſts, the Catechumens ought much leſs to do it. 'Tis hard to ſay, what this Sacrament is, which the Council forbids to give to the Catechumens during the Feaſt of Eaſter. It cannot be the Euchariſt, for that was forbidden to be given them at all times. But the 37th. Canon of the Greek Code of the Canons of the African Church explains it, by obſerving that the Catechumens were forbidden to offer Honey and Milk on any other Day, but Eaſter-Day,

The

The Councils.

The 6th. forbids the giving of the Eucharist to the Dead.

The 7th. regulates the delays of Accusations brought against a Bishop: It orders that their Causes shall be carried to the Tribunal of the Metropolitan; but that a Bishop cannot be excluded from Communion, for not appearing till one Month after he shall be cited by the Metropolitan's Letters, and that if he bring a lawful Excuse for his Absence, one Month more of delay shall yet be given him; but if he appear not in that time, he shall be excluded from Communion till he be acquitted. And if he be not present at last at the Universal Synod which is held every Year, he is to be look'd upon as self condemn'd; he ought not so much as to communicate with his People, while he is excluded from the Communion of other Bishops; that his Accuser ought not to be excommunicated unless he fail to appear on the Day when the Cause is to be heard, and that no Person of a bad Reputation ought to be admitted to accuse a Bishop, unless the business be about Personal Causes which are not Ecclesiastical.

The 8th. regulates the number of Bishops which are requisite to judge Priests and Deacons. It requires five for judging a Priest, and two for judging of a Deacon. It ordains, that the delays shall be observ'd which are contain'd in the fore-mentioned Canon; and as to others of the Faithful, it declares, that the Bishop of the place may take cognizance of them, and judge them alone.

The 9th. ordains, that if a Clergyman being accus'd before the Ecclesiastical Tribunal, remove the Cause to the Civil Magistrates, tho' he even gain the Cause, he shall lose his Place, if it be a Criminal Cause; and if it be a Civil Cause, he shall lose what he had gain'd.

The 10th. declares, that if a Person who has appeal'd from one Ecclesiastical Tribunal to other Ecclesiastical Judges of greater Authority, be by them acquitted, the Sentence given by the former Judges ought not to prejudice the latter, unless they be convicted of being byas'd by Passion, or corrupted by Favour. It adds, that it is never lawful to appeal from those Judges that are chosen, even tho' they were not a sufficient number.

The 11th. forbids the Children of Bishops and Clergymen, to act in profane Shows, or to be present at them, because it is unworthy of Christians to be present in a place where Blasphemies are spoken.

The 12th. forbids Clergymen to give their Daughters in Marriage to Pagans, or Hereticks and Schismaticks.

The 13th. forbids Clergymen to make Donations while they are alive, or by their last Will, to such Persons as are not Catholicks, tho' they should be of their Kindred.

The 14th. forbids them to emancipate their Children, unless they be advis'd by their Kindred, or the Children be come to such an Age, that the Sins which they commit can no longer be imputed to their Parents.

The 15th. forbids them to be Farmers or Proctors, or to get their Livelyhood by dishoneſt Traffick.

The 16th. forbids them to receive more than they had lent.

The 17th. forbids them to co-habit with strange Women, and permits them only to live with their Mothers, their Grand-Mothers, their Aunts, their Sisters, their Nieces, and those of their Domesticks who dwelt in the House with them before their Ordination.

The 18th. ordains, that none shall be ordain'd Priests, Bishops and Deacons, unless they have converted all those who liv'd in the House with them.

The 19th. declares, that Readers are to be obliged, when they come to Age, to marry, or to make the Vow of Chastity.

The 20th. forbids Bishops to undertake any thing in the Dioceses of their Neighbours.

The 21st. forbids them to detain the Clergy of their Fellow-Bishops.

The 22d. ordains that no Clergyman shall be ordained who has not been examined by the Bishops, and approved by the Suffrages of the People. The Councils.

The 23d. that in the Prayers the Name of the Father shall not be put in the place of the Name of the Son, that at the Altar the Prayers shall always be addressed to the Father; that those who have composed private Prayers shall not make use of them, until they have conferred about them with Clergymen of good Learning.

The 24th. that nothing but Bread and Wine mingled with Water shall be offered for the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ.

The 25th. that Clergymen and those who make Profession of Chastity, shall not go to see Widows or Virgins, without the permission of the Bishop or some Priests, that they shall not be with them alone, but with other Ecclesiasticks, or such Persons as the Bishops or the Priests shall appoint them: that Bishops and Priests also shall not visit them alone, but in company with other Ecclesiasticks or Christians of known Probity.

The 26th. forbids the Metropolitan to assume the Title of Prince of the Priests or the Sovereign Priest, and declares, that no other Name ought to be given him but that of Bishop of the First See.

The 27th. forbids Ecclesiasticks to eat or drink at an Inn unless it be in a Journey.

The 28th. forbids Bishops to undertake a Voyage beyond Sea without the consent of the Metropolitan, from whom they should receive Letters recommendatory.

The 29th. declares, that the Sacraments of the Altar ought not to be celebrated by any Persons but such as are fasting, except on Holy Thursday: So that if the Memory of one that is dead is to be celebrated in the Afternoon, the Prayers must only be read without Administring the Sacrament.

The 30th. forbids Clergymen and Bishops to make Feasts in the Churches, and orders, that the People shall be hindred from doing it, as much as is possible.

The 31st. leaves Bishops the liberty to regulate the time of Penance.

The 32d. forbids Priests to reconcile Penitents without asking leave of the Bishop, unless urgent necessity enforce the doing of it in his absence. It adds, that Penitents whose Crimes are very publick and known by all the Church, should receive Imposition of Hands in an high Place near the Bishop's Throne.

The 33d. ordains, that when Virgins happen to lose their Relations who took care of them, the Bishop, or in his absence, the Priest, ought to place them in a Nunnery, or commit them to the care of Women of known Probity.

The 34th. that sick Persons shall be baptized, who cannot answer any longer, when those who are by them testify that they desired it.

The 35th. that the Grace of Reconciliation shall not be denied to Sorcerers, Comædians, and other Infamous Persons, nor even to Apostates, when they are converted.

The 36th. hinders Priests from consecrating Virgins without the Bishop's permission, and absolutely forbids them to make the Holy Chrism.

The 37th. forbids Clergymen to dwell in strange Cities, unless the Bishop or the Priests of both places be satisfied, that they have just and lawful Reasons to do so.

Almost all the Canons which we have now mentioned were made by the Council of Hippo, except some which were added by the Bishops of Byzacena. These last are the 35th. and so on to the 47th. in the Code of the African Canons: There is one besides of the Council of Hippo, which is the 47th. in the 3d. Council of Carthage. This contains a Catalogue of the Canonical Books of the Old and New Testament, in the number of which are the Five Books of Solomon, the Books of Tobit, of Judith, of Esther, the Maccabees, the three Epistles of St. John, that of St. Jude, and the Revelations. 'Tis added in the Council of the Biſhops of Byzacena, that it ſhall be lawful to read publickly the Paſſions of the Martyrs.

What concerns the Canonical Books was alſo repeated in a Council held in 418, under Pope Boniface, wherein it was propoſed, that the Churches of Italy ſhould be conſulted about this Canon.

There were two or three Canons beſides of this Council which were explained in the Synod of Carthage, that we now ſpeak of, whereof the firſt declares, that a Biſhop ſhall not be ordained but by three Biſhops; the ſecond, that thoſe who have no Teſtimonials, and do not remember that they were baptized, ſhall be baptized a-new; and the laſt declares, that the Donatiſts ſhall be receiv'd only to the Rank of Lay-men.

The other Canons were made in this Council of Carthage. The firſt, as appears by the Code of the Canons of the African Councils, is the 48th. wherein Honoratus and Urbanus Legates from the Province of Mauritania, ſay, that they have for a long time expected thoſe of Numidia, and declare, that they approve the Nicene Creed, and the Canon which forbids any to celebrate the Holy Sacrifice unleſs he be faſting. They ſay that Syricius and Simplicianus ought to be conſulted about the caſe of Infants baptized by the Donatiſts, whether they may be ordain'd in the Church or no.

In the 37th. the ſame Legates ſay, that Re-baptizations, Re-ordinations and Tranſlations of Biſhops being forbidden in the full Synod of Capua, they beg leave to addreſs themſelves to the Governor of their Province, to drive away Creſconius, who had removed from Rhegium to Tuburnia, and would not depart from thence, tho' he had been many times admoniſhed. The Council granted them this Leave.

In the 39th. the ſame Perſons deſire, that it may be ordain'd, that the Ordinations of Lay-men cannot be made but by 12 Biſhops: But Aurelius having remonſtrated that this was impoſſible in ſome Provinces, it was ordain'd, that three of them at leaſt ſhould meet. But he adds in the next Canon, that if there be any difference, ſome other Biſhops ſhall be called in to examine what is ſaid againſt the Perſon who is to be ordain'd.

The 41ſt. declares, that the Biſhop of Carthage ſhall publiſh Eaſter-day immediately after the Synod, which ſhall be aſſembled every Year at Carthage. The Councils.

The 42d. forbids the erecting a Church in a Biſhoprick which was put under the Juriſdiction of a Biſhop, without his conſent.

The 43. is againſt thoſe who ſatisfy themſelves with governing their Dioceſs without attending at Synods.

The 44th. declares, that Clergymen ought not to be taken from their own Biſhops to make them Biſhops, without their conſent.

In the 45th. Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage remonſtrates, that commonly Leave is deſired by him from the Biſhop of the place to ordain one of his Clergymen; but he deſires to know what is to be done if he refuſes it.

Numidius obſerves upon this Propoſal, that it was always lawful for the Biſhop of Carthage, to take thoſe who were deſir'd of him and ordain them, tho' they were of another Dioceſs. Epigonius declares in the Name of the Biſhops, that it is his Right: But Poſthumianus remonſtrates, that it may happen that a Biſhop ſhall have but one Prieſt, and it is not juſt to take him away from him. Aurelius anſwers, that a Biſhop may eaſily ordain many Prieſts, but that it is more difficult to find fit Perſons to be Biſhops; and therefore tho' a Biſhop ſhould have but one Prieſt, he ought to give him that he may be made a Biſhop. Poſthumianus replies, that therefore it is juſt, that another Church, which has many Clergymen, ſhould furniſh that which has given the one Prieſt to be a Biſhop; and Aurelius anſwers him, that the Biſhop who has many Prieſts, ſhall be perſuaded to give ſome of them to him who has given his one Prieſt to be a Biſhop.

The 46th. Canon, which ſhould be the laſt, declares, that the Biſhops which have been ordain'd in a Church, where there was never any before, with the conſent of the Biſhop of the Place, ſhall continue in their Biſhopricks; but that they ſhall only govern the People whereof they have been ordain'd Biſhops.

After this Canon follows the Approbation and Subſcription of the Biſhops, which is found in Canon Fifty.

Of Carthage. 398.

THere are 104 Canons, which contain the Ordination and Manners of Biſhops, Prieſts, and other Eccleſiaſticks, which are attributed to a Council of Carthage call'd the Fourth. The Preface declares, that it was held under the Conſulſhip of Honorius and Eutychianus, that's to ſay, in the Year 398, and that Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage preſided in it. But there is ſome difficulty about the truth of theſe Canons; they are neither in the Code of the African Church, nor in the Collection of Canons intituled, The Council of Africk, nor in the Collection of Ferrandus, nor in that of Dionyſius Exiguus, and there is not ſo much as one of them cited in theſe places. In a Manuſcript of Cardinal Barberini, theſe Canons are intituled Ancient Statutes of the Eaſtern Church; but this cannot be the true Title, becauſe the Ceremonies of the Ordination of the leſſer Orders, as they are deſcribed in the Canons of this Council, are agreeable to the Practice of the Weſtern Church, who gave them by delivering the Holy Veſſels, and is not agreeable to the Practice of the Eaſtern Church which never made uſe of this Ceremony, but conferr'd them by Impoſition of Hands. In other Manuſcripts they are intituled, Ancient Statutes of the Church. They agree well enough to the Church of Africa, as appears by the firſt Canon, where it is ordain'd, that a Biſhop ſhall be interrogated, about the Errors common in Africa, whether he believes the Conſubſtantial Trinity; if he believes the Reſurrection of this Fleſh; if he believes that 'tis the ſame God who is the Author of the Old and New Teſtament, of the Law and the Goſpel; if he held that the Devil is not wicked by Nature, but became ſo by his own Will; if he did not condemn ſecond Marriages; if he did not find fault with thoſe who eat Meat; if he believed that Baptiſm pardoned all Sins, Original Sin as well as the other Actual Sins: Laſtly, if he held that a Perſon may be ſaved out of the Church. Theſe are the Errors of the Manichees, Donatiſts, and Pelagians, which were common in Africk. As to the Article which concerns Original Sin, it is ſomething ſurprizing that it ſhould be found ſo expreſly ſet down in a Synod held in 398, ſince Pelagius did not publiſh his Error in Africa till 411, and was not condemned till 412. But it may be this Error was already known, tho' Celeſtius was not yet come into Africa; and there is no doubt but the Church of Africk from that time maintained Original Sin. Howſoever this be, this diſcovers that theſe Canons belong to the Weſtern Church, and even to the Church of Africa. I ſee no reaſon ſtrong enough to convince me that this Preface is ſuppoſititious. The other Canons agree well enough with the Diſcipline of the African Church. The Reaſon why they are not found in the Ancient Collections, may be, becauſe they made a Body of Canons a-part by themſelves for Eccleſiaſticks. They are cited under the Name of the Council of Carthage, by Iſidore, by Hincmar, by Burchardus, by Ivo Carnutenſis, and by Gratian. Of Carthage. 398.

The 1ſt of theſe Canons ordains, that he who is to be promoted to the Epiſcopal Dignity ſhall be examined as to his manner of Life, his Learning and his Faith. As to his manners, it commands that Enquiry be made, made, if he be Prudent, Teachable, Moderate, Charitable, Humble, Affable and Merciful: As to his Learning, if he be enlightned and inſtructed out of the Law of God, if he be skilful in the underſtanding of the Scriptures, and vers'd in the Knowledge of the Dogmes of the Church: As to his Faith, the Canon requires that he be examin'd whether he believes the Conſubſtantial Trinity; whether he believes that the Son of God aſſum'd real Fleſh and a Soul, and that there are two Natures and one Perſon only in Jeſus Chriſt; and whether he affirms, that he was really dead, and ſhall riſe again to judge the Quick and Dead. It adds, that he who is to be ordained muſt alſo be ask'd, If he believes that the ſame God is the Author of the Old and New Teſtament; If he believes that the Devil was not wicked by Nature, but became ſo by his own Free-will; If he believes that the ſame Fleſh which we now carry about with us ſhall be rais'd again; If he be perſuaded of a future Judgment, of future Puniſhments and Glory; If he does not condemn Marriage and ſecond Marriages; If he does not blame the uſe of Meats; If he communicates with Penitents that are reconcil'd; and if he holds that Baptiſm blots out Actual and Original Sin. Theſe are the things about which the Fathers of this Council would have him to be examin'd who is to be ordain'd; and they add, that if he be found well inſtructed in all thoſe Points, he may be ordain'd Biſhop with the conſent of the Clergy and the Laity, in the Aſſembly of the Biſhops of the Province, by the Authority, and in the Preſence of the Metropolitan. That after he has received the Holy Orders of Biſhop, he ought not to govern himſelf according to his Paſſion or Fancy, but according to the Canons of Councils. Of the Council of Carthage in the Year 399.

Of Carthage. 399.

IT was a settled Custom in Africk, that National Councils should be held at Carthage very often. There was one in 399, in the Month of April, which is mentioned in the Code of the Canons of the African Church, which informs us, that this Council sent Epigonius and Vincentius Deputies to the Emperor, to obtain a Law to forbid the taking of those out of Churches who had fled thither, whatsoever Crimes they had been guilty of. Of Carthage. 399.

Of the Council of Carthage in the Year 401, commonly call'd the Fifth.

Of Carthage. 401.

THIS commonly thought that this Council was in the Year 398, but it appears by the Code of the Canons of the African Church, that the greatest part of the Canons attributed to this Council were made in two Assemblies held in the Year 401, in the Months of June and September; and therefore we follow this Code in the Abridgment of the Canons of this Council.

Aurelius remonstrates, that it was necessary for relieving the Churches of Africk, which were under great necessity and grief, to depute some Bishops into the West, and particularly to St. Anastasius Bishop of the Apostolical See, and to Venerius Bishop of Milan. He represents that the Church of Africk was so abused and had suffered so great a Desolation, that it had no Deacon who was sufficiently learned, and much less a Priest; that therefore one might hear every day the Complaints of an infinite number of languishing People, and that if the Bishops did not relieve them they must be accountable to God for the loss of their Souls.

The 1st. Canon of this Council, which is the 57th. in the Greek Code of the African Church, confirms what had been ordain'd in a former Synod, that it should be lawful to ordain those, who having been baptized in their Infancy among the Donatists were afterwards reconciled to the Church; and it leaves it to the Prudence of the Bishops to consider whether or no they might not receive a whole Donatist Church with its Bishop, who should desire to be re-united to the Catholicks.

In the 2d. Aurelius says, that the Emperors ought to be intreated to destroy the Remainders of Idolatry, and to demolish some Temples which were yet standing.

In the 3d. that they must also be desired to give Orders, that it shall not be lawful to summon a Clergy-man for a Witness before a Secular Judge, who has been Arbitrator or Judge of some Difference.

The 4th. that they must be desired to forbid the Feasts and Dancings which are made to the honour of False Gods.

The 5th. that they must be prayed to hinder the showing of Sports, Plays and Comedies, on Sundays and Festivals, particularly at Easter-time, when it happens sometimes that more People go to the Circus than to the Church.

The 6th. that they must be intreated to give Order, that no Person shall defend an Ecclesiastick condemned by the Bishops, under the pain of Correction and a Fine.

The 7th. that they must be desired to hinder Comedians who turn Christians from being forced to exercise their Profession. Of Carthage. 401.

The 8th. that the Power of enfranchising Slaves in the Church must be desired.

The 9th. declares, that if one Equitius a Bishop, be found in Italy, who had been condemned in Africk, leave shall be desired to make a Process against him.

These are the Canons of this first Assembly in the Year 401.

The other Assembly was held the same Year on the 13th. of September. In it were read the Letters of Pope Anastasius, who exhorted the Bishops of Africk not to dissemble the Vexations which they suffer from the Donatists. Nevertheless the Bishops were of Opinion, that they should be treated with gentleness, and that a Letter only should be written to the Governor of Cities, to pray them to cause those Churches to be restored to the Catholick Church, which the Maximianists had usurped. This is found in the Canons 66 and 67, of the Greek Code of the Canons of the African Church.

The 68th. permits the Bishops for Peace-sake, to receive into the Catholick Clergy, those Clergymen of the Donatists who should be converted.

The 69th. declares, that some shall be deputed to the Donatists, to remonstrate to them, that they ought to be reconciled to the Church.

The 70th. ordains Bishops, Priests and Deacons to have no more to do with their Wives, under pain of Degradation; for the lesser Orders, it does not oblige them to Celibacy.

The 71st. forbids a Bishop to forsake the Principal Church of his Dioceses and make his abode at another.

The 72d. declares, that Children ought to be baptized, when there is no proof, nor testimony that they have been already baptized.

The 73d. renews the Canon which ordains, that the Bishop of Carthage shall publish Easter-day.

The 74th. forbids him, who has the care of a Church committed to him after the death of its Bishop, to continue there more than one Year; and obliges him to cause a Bishop to be chosen; and if he neglects it, the Canon ordains that at the end of the Year, another Steward shall be chosen for the Church.

The 76th. is against the Bishops who absent themselves without cause from the National Council.

The 77th. is against a particular Bishop named Cresconius, who refused to come thither. The Council ordains, that he shall come to the first National

The Councils.

African Council, and if he did not, that a Sentence ſhould be paſs'd againſt him.

The 78th. names Deputies for deciding a Difference of a Church in Africa.

The 79th. declares, that thoſe Clergymen are not to be admitted to juſtify themſelves who have continued a Year without taking pains to take off the Excommunication which was pronounced againſt them.

The 80th. ordains, that if a Biſhop give Holy Orders to a Stranger, or if he make a Monk of another Monaſtery, Superior of his own Monaſtery, he ſhall be ſeparated from the Communion of the other Biſhops, and ſhall enjoy only that of his own Church, and that he who was made Clergyman or Superior, ſhall not enjoy that Honour.

The 81ſt. is againſt thoſe Biſhops who ſhould make Hereticks or Pagans their Heirs, tho' they ſhould be of their Kindred.

The 82d. declares, that the Emperor ſhall be deſir'd to grant the Power of ſetting Servants free to the Church.

The 83d. is concerning the Care which Biſhops ought to take, to hinder the Faithful from honouring falſe Relicks and falſe Martyrs.

The 84th. declares, that the Emperor ſhall be requeſted to demoliſh the remaining Temples and Idols.

The 85th. and laſt gives Power to the Biſhop of Carthage to dictate and ſubſcribe, in the name of the whole Council, the Letters which the Council thought fit to write and ſend. Theſe are the Canons of the fifth Council of Carthage, which is commonly plac'd in the Year 398, but was indeed in the Year 401, according to the two Codes of the Canons of the African Church. The Councils.

The Reflections which may be made on the Councils of Africa, of which we have juſt now ſpoken, are theſe; Firſt, that there were in Africa a great number of Biſhops; Secondly, that the Title of Metropolitan in Africa, was not as in other places, affixed to the Biſhop of the Civil Metropolis, but to the Antiquity of the Biſhoprick; Thirdly, that the Biſhop of Carthage had much Authority over all Africk; that he enjoy'd great Juriſdictions and Prerogatives; in a word, that he was, as it were, the Exarch or Patriarch of all Africa; Fourthly, that Synods were very often held in Africa, and they were diſtinguiſhed into two ſorts, one Provincial and the other National or General, which were commonly held at Carthage, where the Biſhops deputed from the Provinces aſſembled under the Authority of the Biſhop of that City; Fifthly, that they handled Matters of Diſcipline, and made ſuch Canons as they ſaw the Juncture and State of Affairs requir'd; Sixthly, that their Diſcipline, with reſpect to Clergymen, was very regular and exact; Seventhly, that they endeavour'd to maintain the Eccleſiaſtical Authority by the Aſſiſtance of the Imperial Laws; Laſtly, that they made many Canons very uſeful for all Chriſtians. Theſe Reflections ſeem'd neceſſary for explaining what I have ſaid of theſe Councils, and they may conduce to repreſent and diſcover the uſefulneſs of Councils in general.

Of the Council of Conſtantinople, in the Year 394.

Of Conſtantinople. 394.

Alſamon has preſerv'd a Fragment of this Council held at Conſtantinople on the 27th. of September in the Year 394. It was compos'd of three Eaſtern Patriarchs, Nectarius of Conſtantinople, Theophilus of Alexandria, and Flavianus of Antioch, and of Sixteen Biſhops of the Eaſt and of Aſia. In it the Difference was examin'd that was between Agapius and Bagadius, who both pretended to the Biſhoprick of Boſtra. Bagadius had been depos'd by two Biſhops. The Council diſapproves this Judgment, and declares, that as a Biſhop cannot be ordain'd but by three Biſhops, ſo neither can he be depos'd by leſs than three. Theophilus ſays, that three Biſhops are not ſufficient, but all the Biſhops of the Province ſhould aſſemble if it be poſſible, and all the Synod approv'd his Judgment. This is all we know of this Council. Of Conſtantinople 394.

Of the Council of Alexandria, in the Year 399.

Of Alexandria. 399.

Theophilus aſſembled in the Year 399, a Council at Alexandria, wherein he condemn'd the Books of Origen. Juſtinian quotes a Fragment of the Letter of this Council in his Epiſtle to Menas. Of Alexandria. 399.

Of the Council of Turin.

Of Turin. 400.

THE Biſhops of Africk were not the only Biſhops who took care to maintain the Diſcipline of the Church about the end of the Fourth Century: Thoſe of Gaul and Spain have alſo left us authentick Monuments of their Paſtoral Vigilance. The former in the Canons of the Council of Turin, and the latter in thoſe of the Council of Toledo, for theſe two Councils were aſſembled in the Year 400, or thereabouts. Of Turin. 400.

The Council of Turin determin'd ſeveral Differences between the Churches and Biſhops of Gaul.

The 1ſt. is, that which Proculus Biſhop of Marſeilles had with the Biſhops of Gallia Narbonenſis, of which he would be acknowledg'd Metropolitan. The Council, for Peace-ſake, granted to the Perſon, and not to the See of Proculus, the Juriſdiction of a Primate over all the Churches in the ſecond Narbonenſis.

The 2d. Difference was between the Biſhops of the Churches of Arles and Vienna, who conteſted the Right of Primacy. The Synod declares, that this Right belongs to him who ſhall prove that his City is the Metropolis; but in the mean time it ordains, as a Proviſion for preſerving Peace, that the Biſhops of theſe two Churches ſhall have under their Juriſdiction the Churches which are neareſt to their own Cities, and that they ſhall live hereafter in Peace, without diſturbing one another, by uſurping the Churches that are remote. Of Turin. 400.

The 3d. Queſtion which was to be determined in this Synod, concern'd four Biſhops, who had made Ordinations contrary to Order: The Council remits their Fault, on condition that they will not relapſe into it any more, and ordains, that for the time to come, thoſe who ſhall relapſe into it, ſhall be diſabled from coming to Synods, and that thoſe who ſhall be ſo ordain'd, ſhall be depriv'd of the Prieſthood.

The 4th. is concerning a Lay-man call'd Palladius, who complain'd of a Sentence given againſt him by his own Biſhop, Triferius; before whom he was not able to prove a Crime of which he had accus'd cus'd a Prieſt. The Council confirms the Sentence of Triferius, leaving him nevertheleſs the Liberty to ſhow favour to Palladius.

It confirms alſo in the 5th. Canon another Sentence of the ſame Biſhop, given againſt the Prieſt Exuperantius, who had vomited forth many Calumnies and Reproaches againſt him.

The 6th. Canon is againſt thoſe who communicated with Felix Biſhop of Triers, who was of the Faction of the Ithacians.

Of Toledo. 400.

THIS Council was held in the Year 400, and compos'd of Nineteen Spaniſh Biſhops aſſembled at Toledo, who having made Profeſſion of the Faith, and condemn'd the Errors of the Priſcillianiſts, made Canons concerning Diſcipline. The firſt thing which they ordained was, that the Canons of the Council of Nice ſhould be obſerv'd: And afterwards they made 20 other Canons.

In the 1ſt. they permit the Order of Deacon to be given to married Perſons, provided they be chaſte, and preſerve Continence; but they impoſe no other Penalty upon a Deacon or a Prieſt who has not liv'd in Continence, and who had Children before the Law which the Biſhops of Luſitania made upon this Subject: They impoſe upon them no other Penalty, but that they ſhall not be capable of riſing to a higher Dignity.

[Continence in theſe Canons is to be underſtood of abſtaining from the Rites of Marriage.]

The 2d. Canon forbids the ordaining of a Perſon who has done publick Penance: It adds, that if neceſſity require, he may be made a Porter or at moſt a Reader; but upon condition, that he neither read the Epiſtles, nor Goſpels, and that if any ſuch Perſon has been ordain'd Deacon, he ſhall be only in the Rank of Sub-Deacons, without being capable of laying on of Hands or touching Holy Things. 'Tis obſerved afterwards, that a Penitent is he who having done publick Penance after his Baptiſm, for Murder, or ſome other Crime of like Nature, has been publickly reconcil'd at the Altar of God.

The 3d. Canon declares, that if a Reader marry a Widow, he cannot be advanc'd to higher Orders, and that at moſt he ſhall only be a Sub-Deacon.

The 4th. that a Sub-Deacon who marries again, ſhall be put in the Rank of Porters or Readers, without being capable of reading the Epiſtles or Goſpels; that he who ſhall marry a third time ſhall be ſeparated from the Church for the ſpace of two Years, and after he is reconcil'd, he ſhall never riſe higher than the Rank of Lay-men.

The 5th. deprives a Clergy-man of Eccleſiaſtical Orders, who being deſign'd for the Service of ſome Church in the City or Country, ſhall not be preſent at the Sacrifice which is made there every Day.

The 6th. forbids Virgins conſecrated to God to have any familiarity with Eccleſiaſtical Men, who are not of their near Kindred.

The 7th. gives leave to Clergy-men who have Wives that do not behave themſelves well, to bind them and ſhut them up in their Houſes, and forbids them to eat with them till they have done Penance.

The 8th. excludes thoſe from Holy Orders who have been in the Wars after they have received Baptiſm.

The 9th. forbids Virgins and Widows, to pray with Strangers in their Houſes, except in the preſence of the Biſhop, a Prieſt or a Deacon.

The 10th. declares, that thoſe muſt not be ordain'd, who have a dependence upon ſome Family, or who are engag'd in ſome Farm, unleſs thoſe upon whom they depend, conſent to it.

The 11th. declares, that if a Man in power has robbed a Clergyman or a poor Monk, and will not appear before the Biſhop to give an Account of what he has done, he ought to be excommunicated till he reſtores the Goods which do not belong to him.

The 12th. forbids to receive a Clergyman from another Biſhop, unleſs he be a Schiſmatick, and declares all thoſe excommunicated who ſeparate from Catholicks to join with Schiſmaticks.

The 13th. ordains, that thoſe who come to Church and do not receive the Communion, ſhall be admoniſh'd, that they muſt either communicate, or be put in the Rank of Penitents, and if they will do neither, they ſhall be excommunicated.

The 14th. ordains, that he ſhall be driven away as a Sacrilegious Perſon, which having received the Euchariſt from the hand of the Biſhop, does not eat it.

The 15th. declares, that we muſt neither eat nor converſe with a Lay-man or Clergyman who is excommunicated.

The 16th. impoſes a Penance of 10 Years for Adultery.

The 17th. declares, that he who has a Concubine and a Wife both together, ought to be excommunicated, but that he ought not to be excommunicated who has only a Concubine; ſo that it is neceſſary for every one that is a Member of the Church, to ſatisfy himſelf either with one Wife or one Concubine. This Canon may give ſome trouble to thoſe, who know not that the Word Concubine, which is at preſent odious, was formerly taken for a Woman, to whom the Marriage-Promiſe was given, tho' ſhe was not married with all the Solemnities which the Laws required in Marriage; as St. Auſtine has explain'd it in the 5th. Chap. of the Book about the Advantages of Marriage.

The 18th. declares, that we ought not to communicate with the Widow of a Biſhop, a Prieſt or a Deacon, if ſhe marries again, and that ſhe ought not to be reconciled until the Point of death.

The 19th. inflicts the ſame Penalty upon the Daughter of a Biſhop, a Prieſt, or a Deacon, who marries after ſhe has been conſecrated to God.

The 20th. is expreſſed in theſe Words: Altho' it is obſerved almoſt every where, not to conſecrate Chriſm without the Biſhop, yet becauſe we are informed that in ſome places the Prieſts do conſecrate it, we have ordain'd that for the future, none but the Biſhop ſhall conſecrate the Holy Chriſm, and that he ſhall ſend it through all his Dioceſs. And to the end that this Canon may be put in Execution, every Church ſhall ſend to the Biſhop a Deacon or Sub-Deacon about Eaſter, that he may fetch Chriſm for that day. 'Tis certain that the Biſhop can conſecrate Chriſm at all times, which the Prieſts cannot do without the Authority and Permiſſion of the Biſhop. The Deacons cannot adminiſter the Holy Chriſm; 'tis only lawful for the Prieſts to do it in the abſence of the Biſhop, or by his Order, if he be preſent.

Theſe are the Eccleſiaſtical Canons wich were made at the End of the Fourth Century, and the beginning of the Fifth.

An Abridgment of the Doctrine of the Fourth Age of the Church.

Of the Doctrine.

THO' there was nothing taught in the Fourth Age of the Church, which was not believed in the three firſt, yet it muſt be confeſs'd that in it the chief Myſteries of Religion were very much clear'd up and explain'd. As to the Divinity and Attributes of God, there was nothing almoſt added to what was ſaid by the ancient Fathers, and they were even leſs handled in this Age than in the preceding. But the Myſtery of the Trinity, as we have ſeen, was the Subject of an infinite number of Books written by the Authors of this Age, and of many Synodical Deciſions. The Divinity of the Son of God and the Holy Spirit was eſtabliſhed. It was proved, that theſe two Perſons are of the ſame Subſtance with the Father; Eſſence and Subſtance was carefully diſtinguiſhed from the Perſon; many Arguments were urged whereon to ground this Doctrine, and the Objections which the Hereticks propos'd againſt it, were anſwer'd.

There was ſome Difference among the Catholicks about the Word, Hypoſtaſis; Some would have it ſaid, that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit were three Hypoſtaſes; and others maintain'd that we ought to ſay, that they were but one and the ſame Hypoſtaſis; but this ſeeming Difference conſiſted only in a Queſtion about a Word, which depended upon the ſignification of the Word Hypoſtaſis, which one Party took for the Perſon, and the other for the Nature. All the Fathers of this Age acknowledged, that the Word was a Perſon diſtinguiſhed from the Perſon of the Eternal Father, and that his Generation was Eternal; but they did not think of explaining how this Generation is made; and they confeſs'd, that it is ineffable and incomprehenſible: Neither did they inſiſt upon a multitude of ſubtle Queſtions concerning the Myſtery of the moſt Holy Trinity, and they always continued in the Simplicity of the Faith, which they eſtabliſhed upon the Authority of Scripture and of Tradition. They taught alſo that the Word appeared to the Patriarchs, and in this ſenſe they ſaid that he was viſible. Tho' they treated not ſo much in this Age of the Myſtery of the Incarnation as in the next, yet it was explained very clearly, and not only the Errors of Arius and Apollinarius were condemned, who denied that Jeſus Chriſt had a Soul or Humane Underſtanding different from the Divinity; but even the Errors of Neſtorius, Eutyches, and all the other Hereticks were rejected before-hand, who either diſtinguiſh two Perſons in Jeſus Chriſt, or confound the two Natures and their Properties. They believ'd the Incarnation to be neceſſary for the Redemption of Mankind, and acknowledged that none can be ſav'd without Faith in Jeſus Chriſt. Some taught alſo that Jeſus Chriſt preach'd the Goſpel to thoſe in Hell, but this Opinion was rejected by many. They affirm'd that there were great numbers of Angels and Devils. They determined nothing about the Day of Judgment, and they did all almoſt confeſs, that Men are wholly ignorant of it. They looked upon what the Ancients ſaid concerning the Reign of Jeſus Chriſt upon Earth for the ſpace of a 1000 Years as a mere groundleſs Imagination. They almoſt all acknowledged that the Souls which are innocent and purified from their Sins, enjoy Happineſs before the Day of Judgment, and that the Souls of the Wicked are condemned to Eternal Fire immediately after their Death: Yet they confeſs'd that after the Reſurrection, their Happineſs or Miſery ſhould ſtill be increaſed. They believed that the Souls of Men were Spiritual and Immortal, but they doubted, whether they were immediately created by God, or produced by the Souls of their Fathers and Mothers. They ſpoke more of Grace than thoſe who lived in the preceding Ages, and yet they aſcribed always very much to Free-Will. Original Sin, begun to be better known. They excluded from the Kingdom of Heaven, Children who died without Baptiſm; but they did not affirm that they ſhould endure the Torments of Fire. They acknowledged the Efficacy and Neceſſity of Baptiſm. The Impoſition of the Hands of the Biſhop, or the Anointing with Holy Chriſm, was looked upon as a Sacrament which brought down the Holy Spirit upon the Baptized. They maintain'd againſt the Novatians, that the Church had Power to impoſe Penance, and to forgive the moſt Enormous Sins. They taught clearly, that the Bread and Wine of the Euchariſt were changed into the Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt. They gave the Name of a Sacrifice to the Celebration of the Euchariſt, and performed it with particular Ceremonies. They were perſuaded that Men ought to be ordain'd to make them capable of diſcharging the Eccleſiaſtical Functions. They approved of Marriage, and would have the Perſons to be married, contracted in the face of the Church, and in the preſence of a Prieſt who gave a Bleſſing. They honoured Virginity, and commended thoſe who profeſs'd it; and look'd upon thoſe as Sacrilegious Perſons who violated that Profeſſion. They had much Reverence and Veneration for the Bleſſed Virgin and for the Saints; they prayed to them, and alſo honoured their Reliques. They prayed for the Dead. We have often taken notice of their Opinion concerning the Authority of Holy Scripture and Tradition. They taught that there was but one Catholick Church, out of which there was no Salvation, and to whoſe Authority all Men ought to ſubmit, becauſe it can neither ceaſe to be, nor err in Matters of Faith.

Of the Doctrine.

Wherefore one may ſay in general, that the Doctrine of the Fourth Age was the Belief of the Church of that Age, and ſo the Church not being capable of changing her Belief, it neceſſarily follows, that the Doctrine of that time, is not at all different from that which the Church teaches ſtill at this Day.

An Abridgment of the Diſcipline of the Fourth Age of the Church.

Of the Diſcipline.

THE Diſcipline of the Church conſiſts, either in the Government or in the Policy, or in the Ceremonies, or in the Practices which concern Manners and Chriſtian Perfection. It cannot be doubted but theſe three Points, and eſpecially the two former, were very much improved in the Fourth Age of the Church. For before this time, the Church which had been continually toſs'd and troubled with Perſecutions, could never ſettle one conſtant and uniform Form of Government, nor celebrate the Myſteries with the Pomp and Splendor of Ceremonies: But when once ſhe was perfectly deliver'd from the Yoke of Tyranny, under which ſhe had groaned before, and eſtabliſhed by the Authority of a Chriſtian Emperor, ſhe made Rules and Laws for the Government of her ſelf, and joined to the Purity of Faith the Magnificence of Ceremonies. Thus tho' there had been ſome Rules for the Government of the Churches of the Firſt Ages, which were eſtabliſh'd by Cuſtom and Tradition, and there were already many Ceremonies practis'd; yet it may be affirm'd that theſe things were very much improv'd in the Fourth Age of the Church, as will eaſily appear by comparing what was ordain'd and practis'd in that Age, with what was done in the foregoing.

Of the Diſcipline.

Firſt, as to the Government of the Church. It was in the Fourth Age that the Body of the Churches were perfected, and that certain Rules were eſtabliſh'd bliſh'd for Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions. The Diſtinction, Diſtribution and Subordination of Churches were ſettled for the moſt part according to the Form of the Civil Government. The Civil Provinces form'd the Body of an Eccleſiaſtical Province. The Biſhop of the Civil Metropolis was look'd upon as the firſt Biſhop of the Province. Some Rights and Prerogatives were aſſign'd to him, and the Care of overſeeing the whole Province was committed to him. In every Province there were held twice a Year Provincial Councils, which the Metropolitan call'd together, and over which he preſided. When a Biſhop died, all the Biſhops of the Province were called together to ordain a Succeſſor in his room. He was commonly choſen by the Clergy and People of the vacant Church; the Metropolitan was to be preſent at this Ordination, and he could not do it unleſs two Biſhops of the Province were with him, and the reſt conſented to it. As many Civil Provinces made one Diſtrict, which was call'd a Dioceſs, ſo many Eccleſiaſtical Provinces made one Eccleſiaſtical Dioceſs, of which the Biſhop of the Principal City was the Head. This Biſhop had the Rights, Prerogatives, Privileges of Honour and Juriſdiction over the whole Dioceſs; he enjoy'd alſo the Right of ordaining Metropolitans, which belong'd formerly to the Biſhops of the Province. The Biſhop of the Church of Rome was in poſſeſſion of the Primacy which he receiv'd from Jeſus Chriſt, as being Succeſſor to St. Peter Prince of the Apoſtles. This Primacy gave him great Rights and Prerogatives in the whole Church, to maintain the Faith, and cauſe the Holy Canons to be obſerv'd. It happened ſometimes, but ſeldom, that he abuſed his Power and Authority, but when this happened, the Church was ſatisfied that ſhe could remedy the Abuſe. So when Liberius had ſubſcribed to an Arian Creed, and condemned St. Athanaſius, the other Biſhops did not think themſelves obliged to follow his Example. The Churches of Alexandria, of Antioch, and ſome others, had alſo their Privileges founded upon Eccleſiaſtical Cuſtom. The Church of Jeruſalem had a Degree of Honour, and acquired by little and little ſome Jurisdiction. Laſtly, the Biſhop of Conſtantinople procured to himſelf the ſecond Rank of Honour, and in a little time aſſumed to himſelf the Juriſdiction over Thrace, Pontus, and leſſer Aſia. The Suburbicary Churches had in a manner no other Metropolitan but the Biſhop of Rome. The Churches of Gaul and Spain were governed by Metropolitans and Provincial Synods. The Churches of Africa had no fixed Metropolitan; this Dignity belong'd to the moſt ancient Biſhop of the Province: But the Biſhop of Carthage had great Rights and Prerogatives, and even a kind of Juriſdiction over all Africk. As to the Churches without the Roman Empire, they had no certain Form, and they were for the moſt part govern'd by one Biſhop only who had under him many Prieſts. The Prieſts took care of the People together with the Biſhops: There were alſo Churches in the Cities and the Country, where they preſided over the Aſſemblies of the People, as Pariſh-Prieſts do now. There were alſo Suffragans who held a middle place between Biſhops and Prieſts: There was no Biſhop, Prieſt, Deacon, or Miniſter ordain'd, but who was engaged to do his Duty in one certain Church, and this he was obliged to diſcharge.

Of the Diſcipline.

As for Eccleſiaſtical Deciſions, a Biſhop never judg'd any thing without the Advice of his Clergy. Provincial Councils were commonly held twice a Year, where the Determinations and Differences of the Biſhops of the Province were examined: There all Eccleſiaſtical Differences were firſt decided, Matters of Faith only excepted. But thoſe who thought themſelves injured, quickly had recourſe to the Biſhop who preſided over the Dioceſs, and to his Synod. The Biſhop of Rome pretended to have this Juriſdiction over all the reſt, and the Council of Sardica granted him ſomething like it. But the Eaſtern Churches and many others maintain'd the Authority of their Dioceſan or National Synods: All the Biſhops thought themſelves Judges of Matters of Faith. When any Queſtion of Faith became a publick Diſpute, the Biſhops of the great Sees were conſulted, and chiefly the Biſhop of Rome, whoſe Opinion was of great weight, as well upon the account of his Primacy, as becauſe he anſwer'd in the Name of all the Weſtern Biſhops, and was a Witneſs of their Doctrine. The General Council of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops, was looked upon as the Sovereign Judge for deciding all ſorts of Eccleſiaſtical Controverſies. Excommunication or Separation from the viſible Communion of the Church, was the Eccleſiaſtical Penalty, which was made uſe of againſt all thoſe who were convicted of an Error or a Crime; if they repented, they were put under Penance, and then they might be reſtor'd to the Communion of the Church; but if they were obſtinate, they were wholly caſt out. The Churches were united together by Letters of Communion. 'Twas forbidden to receive any one into the Church, who had been excommunicated, by his own Biſhop, without his conſent. And ſo thoſe who were excommunicated, were ſeparated from the Communion of all the Churches in the World. If any particular Church, any Biſhops, or any other Perſons ſeparated themſelves from the Body of the Church, or continued ſeparated from it, they were look'd upon as Schiſmaticks. Tranſlations of Biſhops were forbidden; they were very rare in the Weſt; but the Ambition of ſome Biſhops made them common in the Eaſt. Many Canons were made for hindering Biſhops and Clergymen from going to Court. A Biſhop was forbidden to meddle with the Affairs of another Dioceſs, or to ordain any Perſons out of his own. Perſons of an unblameable Life were made choice of to enter into Holy Orders; they were depos'd when they committed any Crime. In many Churches the Age and the neceſſary times were preſcribed, at which any one could be rais'd to Eccleſiaſtical Orders. The Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, were obliged to Celibacy in the Weſt; which Law was not eſtabliſhed in the Eaſt. The Church begun then to have great Riches, which came to her from the Liberality of the Emperors and others of the Faithful. The Sacraments were adminiſtred gratis, and it was forbidden to take or give any thing for a Spiritual Benefit. Many very uſeful Canons were made concerning the Life and Manners of Eccleſiaſticks. In a word, Nothing can be greater or wiſer than the [Whoever has attentively read the foregoing account of the Controverſies by which the Church was divided in this Age, and of the Synods that were convened to determine them, can make a very true Judgment whether this is not ſaid (to ſave himſelf) by a Man, who having in his other Writings appeared ſo zealouſly for the Privileges of the Gallican Church againſt the Pretenſions of the Court of Rome, thought himſelf obliged to inſert this Period for the ſatisfaction of his ſcrupulous Brethren. Theſe Abridgments are deſigned to be heaps of Concluſions from Premiſes already laid down in the precedent Work, ſo that tho' this Propoſition were true in it ſelf, it were here impertinent, becauſe it cannot be collected from what went before, which makes me think that this Period belongs more to the Licenſers than the Author. I need only appeal to this very Hiſtory, from which two Concluſions may be certainly drawn. Firſt, That the orthodox Biſhops who were perſecuted by Conſtantius and Valens in the Eaſt, were glad to fly to Rome for ſhelter, and would, as all Men naturally do, make the moſt of the Aſſiſtance they found, that poſſibly they could. Secondly, That every Metropolitical See was equally concerned to preſerve its own Rights, and the reſt of the Church thought it only a Matter of Diſcipline, inſtituted for the ſake of Order and Decency, that one Church had the Rights of a Metropolis, rather than another. This laſt, Mr. Du Pin takes pains himſelf to prove, from whence at leaſt this muſt be plain, That he muſt believe that in the Fourth Age of the Church, all the Supremacy that was allow'd to the Church of Rome was only Titular out of its own Juriſdiction; and then the Primacy granted to St. Peter could not have then been underſtood to belong to any of his Succeſſors, (even tho' we ſhould allow them to have thought that St. Peter had a real Authority) ſince the reſt of the Church plainly acted without any regard to it, and teſtified no remorſe for it afterwards.]

Of the Diſcipline.

Laws which were made at this time, concerning the Government of the Church; but it muſt be confeſs'd, that they were not always very exactly obſerved, and that the Intereſts and Paſſions of Men, the Ambition of Biſhops, and the Will of Princes, cauſed them often to be violated, contrary to the Intention of the Church, which uſed all her Endeavours to maintain them.

When Chriſtians began in the Reign of Conſtantine to perform Divine Service publickly with Pomp and Solemnity, there is no doubt but the ancient Eccleſiaſtical Ceremonies were then perfected, and that new ones were added to render the Celebration of the Holy Myſteries more venerable to the People. Some of the chief of them were theſe.

Baptiſm was adminiſtred to Infants and Adult Perſons with many Ceremonies. They were dipped three times into the Water. Exorciſms and Anointings were in uſe. Milk and Honey were given to the Catechumens. The ſolemn times for adminiſtring Baptiſm were Eaſter and Whitſunday, and alſo Epiphany in ſome Churches. The Adult were prepared for receiving this Sacrament a conſiderable time before, and there were many Degrees of Catechumens, as we have already obſerved. After Baptiſm the Biſhop conferred the Fulneſs of the Holy Spirit, by Impoſition of Hands in the Latin Church, and by Unction in the Greek. The Times and Degrees of publick Penance for Crimes committed after Baptiſm were ſettled by an infinite number of Canons, yet it was always left to the Diſcretion of the Biſhop, to leſſen or increaſe them. Publick Penance was impoſed for all the great Crimes, which the Penitents were either convicted of, or confeſs'd themſelves to be guilty of. Abſolution was not commonly refus'd for any Crime; but Penance was never granted twice. The Holy Sacrifice of the Euchariſt was celebrated with Ceremonies. The Euchariſt was commonly given to the Laity in both Kinds; but upon certain Occaſions they gave it in one Kind only. The Bread which was conſecrated was ordinary Bread, broken into many Pieces. The Faithful were often preſent at the Holy Sacrifice; Catechumens and Penitents were debarred from it; the Euchariſt was received in the Act of Adoration. The Laity receiv'd alſo the Bread of the Euchariſt into their hands, but the cuſtom of carrying it to their Houſes was very rare, and it was commonly ſpent all in the Church, while they were faſting. The Love-Feaſts or Feaſts of Charity, were removed in moſt Churches; almoſt all thoſe that were preſent at the Sacrifice received the Communion; and ſo Chriſtians receiv'd the Body of Jeſus Chriſt very often, and yet were perſuaded, that they ought to be holy and innocent to receive it worthily. Before the Communion-Office began there were ſome Prayers which were made for Catechumens and Penitents. The Holy Scripture was read in the Aſſemblies of Chriſtians, and the Biſhop or one of the Prieſts preached the Word of God. Theſe Aſſemblies were held in Churches conſecrated to God, and built magnificently; they were made very ſplendid, and Divine Offices were celebrated there with much Pomp and Splendor. Singing of Pſalms was alſo us'd; Wax-Candles were lighted chiefly during the Nocturnal Offices. The Dead were buried with much Ceremony and Pomp. The great Feſtivals were celebrated with much Solemnity. Proceſſions began to be introduced. Prayer for the Dead was a common Practice in the Church; they were commemorated at the Celebration of the Euchariſt. The Invocation of Saints and Martyrs, and the Celebration of their Feſtivals were common in all the Churches; the uſe of Croſſes was frequent; the Sign of the Croſs was made very often; there were Images in many Churches. A Bleſſing was given for Marriage; but the Church never gave it for ſecond Marriages, and they even put Bigamiſts under Penance for ſome time. Marriages contracted between Perſons who could not lawfully marry according to the Civil Laws, were looked upon as null. Divorce for Adultery was permitted in ſome Churches. Orders were conferred by Impoſition of Hands. Biſhops had the ſole Power of Ordaining Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, and of Confirming. Solemn Baptiſm alſo, and the Abſolution of Publick Penitents was reſerv'd to them. The number of leſſer Orders was not fixed; there were more or fewer of them in different Churches. There were Deaconneſſes in almoſt all Churches. The Myſteries were carefully conceal'd from thoſe who were not yet baptized. The Biſhops, Prieſts, Deacons, and the Laity had their Places in the Churches. In ſhort, Divine Service was performed with much Decency, Modeſty, Gravity and Pomp.

Of the Diſcipline.

Faſting is one of the chief external Practices which concern Manners: The Chriſtians of the Fourth Age were very religious in obſerving it. Lent was eſtabliſhed in all Churches, tho' it was longer or ſhorter in different Places. The Faſts of Wedneſday and Friday or (Saturday in the Church of Rome) were alſo religiouſly obſerved. During the time of Faſting, they waited till Night in Lent before they eat any thing, and till three a-Clock in the Afternoon in other Faſts; and all this time they commonly abſtained from Meat and Wine in almoſt all Churches. The Monaſtick State was eſtabliſhed in this Age, and became very common in a little time. There quickly appear'd a great number of Monaſteries full of an infinite number of Monks, who retir'd from the World, obſerv'd Celibacy, liv'd in Obedience, kept exceſſive Faſts, and perform'd very great Auſterities. Many Virgins were alſo conſecrated to God, made a Vow of Virginity, and liv'd in common under the Government of an Abbeſs. The Monks and Nuns were both under the Juriſdiction of their Biſhops. There were very few Monks who were Prieſts; ſome were taken out of Monaſteries to be made Biſhops. There were alſo ſome Hermits who dwelt alone in the Deſarts. The Chriſtians were conſtantly at Prayers and gave great Alms to the Poor, aſſiſted the Sick, viſited Priſoners, and did ſeveral other Works of Charity. They ſometimes undertook Pilgrimages to viſit the Holy Places; but tho' the Holy Fathers approved the Devotion, yet they feared the Accidents which might happen upon it, and were not of Opinion, that theſe kind of Journies ſhould be undertaken raſhly and lightly. They did not tolerate ſuperſtitious Practices, nor any new Devotions founded upon the Imaginations of private Perſons, but they recommended the Practice of Evangelical Councils, and exhorted all Chriſtians to go on to that Perfection which is deſcribed in many Places of the Goſpel.

Theſe are ſome part of the Points of Diſcipline of the Fourth Age of the Church: I ſhall not ſtay now to obſerve many others, nor to prove theſe by Authentical Teſtimonies; becauſe my Deſign is not to make a Diſſertation upon this Subject, which would be longer than all this Volume, but only to give a ſlight Idea of the Diſcipline of that time. Neither ſhall I undertake to collect or abridge what the Writers of this Age have ſaid of Morality, which would be an infinite Work; and the Reader ought to be ſatisfied with the Extracts that are made in the body of our Book taken from the fineſt Paſſages of the Authors here mentioned.

Of

Of the Councils held in the Fifth Age.

The Canons of a Council, supposed to have been held at Rome under Pope Innocent I.

Spurious Council &c.

SIRMONDUS hath published some Regulations, written in the Name of a Synod at Rome, to the Bishops of Gaul; which are certainly ancient, though it be unknown to what time they are to be referred: but because they appeared to Sirmondus to be written in the Style of St. Innocent's Letters, he believed they might belong to this Pope; however, they are placed immediately after his Letters, and these are the Contents of them.

After a short Preface, in the two first Canons according to Sirmondus's Distinction, they speak of Virgins Penance, who having solemnly put on the Veil, and received the Priests Benediction, commit Incest, or contract prohibited Marriages; it is ordained, that they shall do several Years Penance, to bewail their Fault. Penance is likewise imposed upon those that made the single Vow of Virginity, though they made no solemn Profession, nor received the Veil; when they happen to marry, or suffer themselves to be taken away. The third Canon is, concerning the Sanctity of Bishops, of Priests, and of Deacons: they are told, that they ought to give Example to the People; that they are obliged to remain Unmarried: and several Reasons are alledged for it. Priests and Bishops (say they) are to preach Continence to the People: With what confidence shall they do this, if they keep it not themselves? they are obliged to offer frequently the Holy Sacrifice, to baptize, consecrate and administer: To do it with the greater Reverence, they must be Chaste both in Body and Spirit. In the Fourth, those seem to be excluded out of the Clergy, that have born any Secular Offices.

In the fifth Canon, it is observed, that the Church of Rome doth not admit to Sacred Orders those who defiled the Sanctity of their Baptism by any carnal Sin. In the sixth, other Bishops are exhorted to follow the Custom of that of Rome: because that as there is but one Faith in the Church, so there should be but one Discipline.

It is observed in the seventh Canon, that Priests and Deacons may administer Baptism in the Easter Holy-days, in Parishes, in the presence of the Bishop, in whose Name they administer it at that time: but when Necessity obliges them to baptize at any other time, that must be done by the Priest, and not not by the Deacon. Spurious Council &c.

The eighth Canon, about the Benediction of the Holy Oyl, is very obscure. It is probable, that all that is said there, amounts to no more than, that there is no need of several Persons to bless it. The Ninth declares, that it is not lawful now, as it was under the Old Law, to marry a Brother's Wife, nor to keep Concubines with a Wife.

The tenth forbids those to be ordained Bishops, that have exercised Secular Functions, though they were chosen by the People: because their Approbation is of force, only when they chuse one worthy of that Office.

The eleventh Canon speaks very ambiguously concerning a Man's Marrying his Uncle's Wife; or an Aunt's Marrying with the Son of her Husband's Brother.

The twelfth appoints, that a Bishop should be chosen out of the Clergy.

The thirteenth declares, that those who go from one Church to another should be deprived of their Office.

The fourteenth contains that Order so often repeatin the Canons, that a Clerk deposed by his own Bishop, is not to be admitted. This Practice is forbidden in very strong Terms, and upon very good Reasons. If another Bishop's Clerk is not permitted to do the Functions of his Ministry, except he brought his Dimissory Letters; how much rather is it forbidden to receive and admit to the Communion a Clerk condemned by his own Bishop. This would be to partake of another Man's Sin; to offer Injury to a Brother, and suspect him without ground to have done Unjustly.

The fifteenth Canon confirms and renews the Law of the Council of Nice, touching the Ordination of Bishops by the Metropolitan, and the Bishops of the Province; and forbids Bishops to meddle with those Ordinations that belong not to them.

The sixteenth is against the Abuse of those Bishops who had ordained some Lay-men that had been Excommunicated by their own Bishop.

Of Milevis 401.

THis Council was assembled at Milevis, a City of Africa, the 26th. of October, 402. It is one of those the Africans called General; that is, it was not composed of Bishops only of one Province, but of Deputies from all the Provinces of Africa. Aurelius, Bishop of Carthage, presided there. The Bishops confirmed at first what had been done in the last Councils of Hippo and Carthage; and then made some New Orders about some particular Contests among the African Bishops. Of Milevis 401.

The first is concerning the Precedency of the Older Bishops. Having justified the Equity of following the ancient Order, according to the established Custom of Africa, it was ordained, to prevent the Contests that might happen upon that Subject, that they should keep two Lists, which they called Matriculas, or Archives of all the Bishops of Numidia; the one to be preserved in the City of the Chief See; that is, in Carthage, or in that City whose Bishop was Metropolitan by Seniority: and the other in the Civil Metropolis; that is, in Constantina. This Order seems to have been made upon the Occasion of that Contest betwixt Victorinus and Xantippus, Bishops of the Province of Numidia, who both pretended to the Primacy of that Province, as appears by St. Augustine's 59th. Letter.

The second Canon is, touching the Accusation formed against Quodvultdeus, Bishop of Centuria. His Accuser presented himself to the Synod, and caused Quodvultdeus to be asked, whether he would have his Cause debated in the Council. The Bishop consented at first; but the next day he was of another mind, and retired. The Bishops ordered, that he should not be admitted to the Communion of the other Bishops, till his Business was decided, yet without depriving him of his Bishoprick; because they thought it unjust to do it before his Cause was judged.

The next Order was, concerning Maximianus, Bishop of Vaga, who offered to quit his Bishoprick for the Good of the Church, (as it is observed in St. Augustine's 69th. Letter.) The Council ordained, that a Letter should be sent both to him, and to his People, to oblige him to withdraw; and, that the People should chuse another.

Of Milevis 401.

The fourth Canon is likewiſe to prevent Conteſts about the Seniority of the Biſhops; enjoyning the Biſhops ordained in Africa, to take Teſtimonial-Letters of thoſe that ordained them; marking both the Day and the Year of their Ordination.

The laſt Canon forbids any Man to be admitted into the Clergy of one Church, who performed the Duty of a Reader in another. Of Milevis 401.

Theſe Canons are in the Code of the African Church, from the Eighty ſixth, &c. to the ninetieth incluſively.

BOth theſe Councils examined the Accuſations brought by Euſebius of Valentinople, againſt Antoninus Biſhop of Epheſus. The Hiſtory of them is in the Life of St. Chryſoſtome, (pag. 8.) of this Volume. Of Conſtantinople. 400, 401.

THe Hiſtory of this Synod is likewiſe in the Life of St. Chryſoſtome, (page. 9.) It is taken out of of Palladius, and out of the Abridgment of the Acts of this Council, quoted by Photius, Cod. 59th. of his Bibliotheca. A Council at the Oak, &c. 403.

Of Carthage. 403.

UPON the three and twentieth Day of Auguſt, in the Year 403. was held at Carthage a General Council of Africa, wherein the Biſhops that had been ſent to the Churches beyond the Seas, about the Donatiſts buſineſs, having reported what they had found, and the Excuſes of thoſe Provinces that had ſent no Deputies being allowed, a Command was laid upon the Catholick Biſhops of each City, to ſend a ſort of a Summons to the Donatiſt Biſhops of the ſame Cities, to oblige them to enter upon a Conference. And that this might be done uniformly, they preſcribed a Form for this Act, which ſhould be made in the Preſence of publick Officers. Wherefore the Biſhops of this Council deſired, that the Proconſul Septimius, would ſend word to the Officers to help them in the Buſineſs, and to give them authentick Acts of thoſe Summons. This Petition is regiſtred in the Acts of the third Conference at Carthage, in the 183 Ch. of the third Day. Of Carthage. 403.

Of Carthage. 404.

THe Donatiſt Biſhops having anſwered theſe Summons of the Catholick Biſhops only with Violences and Threatnings, the Catholicks aſſembled in a Council held the next Year upon the 25th. of June, deputed Theaſius, and Evodius, to the Emperors, to obtain from them ſuch Orders, as might prevent the Violences which the Circumcellians exerciſed againſt the Catholicks; and to petition at the ſame time, that Theodoſius's Law, which impoſes ten Pounds Penalty upon ſuch as ordained Hereticks, or admitted them into their Aſſemblies, might take place againſt thoſe who ſhould detain the Proteſtations of Catholicks; and that the Law might be renewed which diſabled Hereticks either to give, or receive Legacies. Theſe were the Contents of the Memorials, given to both thoſe deputed Biſhops. Aurelius had a Commiſſion to write to the Emperors in the Name of all the Biſhops; and they alſo charged him to write to the Judges, till the Deputies were come back to obtain of them ſome Protection for the Church; and he is deſired to write to the Biſhop of Rome about it. Of Carthage. 404.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 405.

Of Carthage. 405.

THIS Council, aſſembled upon the 21ſt. of Auguſt, made no general Canons for Africa, but only regulated ſome particular Buſineſſes, which the Collector of the African Code hath expreſſed in theſe Terms. 'It was ordained in this 'Council, that all the Provinces ſhould ſend their 'Deputies to the General Council. Deputies were 'ſent with a Letter to Mizonius, to let him know, 'that he might ſend Deputies with all Freedom. 'It was thought fit to write to the Judges, to intreat them, that they would uſe their Endeavours 'to reconcile the Donatiſts, and the Catholicks, as 'had been already done at Carthage. And they were 'to write to the Emperor, to thank him for excluding the Donatiſts. But Pope Innocent having declared in his Letter which was read in the Council, 'that it was not convenient to ſend Biſhops beyond the Seas, his Advice was approved, and 'they ſent only Clerks of the Church of Carthage, 'to return the Thanks of the African Biſhops. Of Carthage. 405.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 407.

Of Carthage. 407.

THIS Council, aſſembled upon the 13th. of June, made a great many very uſeful Regulations.

The Council of Hippo ordained, that a General Council of Africa ſhould Yearly be held at Carthage. This diſcharges the Biſhops of that annual Fatigue; and leaves it to the Prudence of the Biſhop of Carthage, to call one, when, and where he thought fit. This is the ſubſtance of the firſt Canon of this Synod, which is the 95th. of the African Code. The ſecond ordains, that whoever appeals from an Eccleſiaſtical Judgment, may chuſe ſuch Judges as he ſhall think fit, with the Conſent of his Accuſer; and that, from their Judgment, there ſhall be no Appeal. Of Carthage. 407.

After this, they admitted the Deputies of the Provinces, and ordered, that five Men ſhould be appointed to ſee the Canons put in Execution.

The third ordains, that Vincentius, and Fortunatianus, who were deputed to the Emperor, ſhould ask leave to nominate Advocates from among thoſe that were actually in the Service of the Church, that they

they might have Power to maintain the Church's Intereſts, and to go in to the Judges Courts, as the Biſhops did, and make ſuch Remonſtrances as they ſhould think neceſſary.

They diſcourſed of the Deputies Power at Court; and it was judged convenient, not to preſcribe to them what they ſhould ſay there. The Deputies of the Province of Mauritania Cæſarienſis complained, that Enquiry having been made after Primoſus to cite him to the Council, he could not be found.

The fourth Canon, which is the 98th. in the African Code, forbids the eſtabliſhing of Biſhops in thoſe Cities that had none before, without the Authority of a Metropolitan, and of a Council of the whole Province.

In the next, the People that are reconciled to the Church, and had a Biſhop before their Reconciliation, are allow'd either to chuſe one, or to ſubmit themſelves to the neareſt Catholick Biſhop. For thoſe who had no Biſhop before, they are ſubjected to that Biſhop who converted them, if that Converſion happen before the Emperor's Law was enacted; but if ſince, then they muſt have their dependence upon their natural Biſhop.

In the ſixth Canon, Judges are nominated to examine the Buſineſs of certain Deputies, who came not to the Synod, according to their Primate's Order.

In the ſeventh, it is reſolved to write to Pope Innocent about the Diſpute betwixt the Church of Rome, and that of Alexandria, that ſo both thoſe Churches might be at peace, and keep a good Correſpondence with each other.

The eighth Canon forbids divorced Perſons to be married to others. This Regulation is there judged to be conformable to the Law of the Goſpel, and to the Deciſion of the Apoſtle St. Paul. But ſince the Civil Laws gave leave to the Husband, to marry after putting away his Wife, it is ſaid, that the Emperor ſhould be intreated to make another Law againſt that Cuſtom.

The Councils.

The ninth Canon prohibits the uſe of other publick Prayers, Prefaces, or Recommendations, or practiſing of another Form of laying on of Hands, beſides thoſe which are approved by the Councils, and compoſed by Men of known Piety.

By the tenth, thoſe are to be degraded from the Honour of Prieſthood, that ſhould deſire of the Emperor to be try'd by Secular Judges, but they are not reſtrained from deſiring of him to be try'd by Eccleſiaſtical ones.

The eleventh provides, that thoſe ſhall be abſolutely degraded, who having been excommunicated in Africa, repaired to remote Churches, to be admitted to Communion.

The twelfth and laſt Canon, which is the 106th. in the African Code, appoints, that ſuch Clerks, or Biſhops as deſire to go to Court, ſhall be obliged to take Teſtimonial Letters of their reſpective Biſhop, or Metropolitan, directed to the Biſhop of Rome, and containing the Reaſons that bring them thither, that ſo the Biſhop of Rome might grant them another Letter to go to the Court. It does not permit that a Biſhop, who had a Letter to go to Rome only, to have one from the Pope, to go to Court, except a new Buſineſs ſhould happen, which he ſhould acquaint the Biſhop of Rome withal, and which ſhould be mentioned in the Letter that he ſhould give him. It is provided likewiſe, that in that ſort of Letters, ſhall be ſet down the Day of Eaſter for that Year, that they may not want Date, or the Eaſter of the Year paſt, if that of the preſent is not exactly known.

Two Councils of Carthage, in the Year 408.

Of Carthage. 408.

THE former of theſe Councils is of the 14th. of June, 408. All that is ſaid of it in the African Code, is, that Fortunatianus was made Deputy againſt the Heathens, and the Hereticks.

The latter is of the 12th. of October. There they deputed the Biſhops Reſtitutus, and Florentius to Court, to ask for Succour againſt the Heathens, and Hereticks, at the ſame time that Severus, and Macarius were executed, and Theaſius, Evodius, and Victor were murthered upon their Account.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 410.

Of Carthage. 410.

UPON the twelfth of June 410. a Council aſſembled at Carthage, deputed five Biſhops to the Emperor, upon occaſion of a Law of Valentinian, which granted Liberty of Conſcience, that it might not prejudice the Laws made againſt the Hereticks of Africa.

The Council of Ptolemais.

Of Ptolemais. 411.

ANDRONICUS, Governor of Pentapolis, guilty of great Oppreſſion, and Injuſtice, which he exerciſed in that Province, was excommunicated by a Synod of Biſhops held at Ptolemais. There Syneſius made a Speech againſt him. But this Governor having ask'd Pardon, and promiſed to behave himſelf otherwiſe, the publiſhing of the Sentence of the Synod was ſuſpended. There is an Account of this Matter in the Abridgment of the 57th. 58th. and 72d. Letters of Syneſius. Mention is made alſo of Aſſemblies of ſome Biſhops, in the 67th. Letter of the ſame Author.

The Conference at Carthage.

Of Carthage. 411.

THE Catholick Biſhops had often demanded, ever ſince the Year 403. a Conference with the Donatiſt Biſhops, to examine the Reaſons which theſe pretended for their Separation from the Church in an amicable manner. The Donatiſt Biſhops had conſtantly refuſed it, till the Year 406. and then conſented to have one. They cauſed this Deſign to be authorized by an Order of the Emperor Honorius, diſpatched at Ravenna on the 14th. of October 410. Count Marcellinus was nominated Preſident; and for the Execution of that Order, two Rules were made; the one to appoint the Day of the Conference, and the other to fix the manner of Proceedings, and to oblige the Biſhops of both ſides, to declare whether they accepted of it.

Of Carthage. 411.

The Conference began at Carthage upon the firſt Day of June 411. The Donatiſt Biſhops met there to the number of 278. and the Catholicks were 286.

The Councils.

Marcellinus ordered, that ſeven Biſhops of each Party ſhould be choſen to ſpeak, of whom the chiefeſt of the Catholicks were St. Auguſtine, and Alypius, and that beſides theſe, ſeven ſhould be named to aſſiſt as Counſellors, and four to over-look, that the Notaries ſhould faithfully ſet down what ſhould be ſaid. He commanded alſo, that every one ſhould ſet his Hand to what he aſſerted; and that whatſoever was done ſhould be communicated to the People. He ordered, that the thirty ſix deputed Biſhops ſhould be admitted into the Place of the Conference. But the Donatiſts would be all there; and the Catholicks were contented, that their eighteen Deputies only ſhould be preſent.

The firſt Day was ſpent in perſonal Conteſts, concerning the Biſhop's Qualifications. Marcellinus confeſſed at firſt, that it was above his capacity to be a Judge of that Cauſe; and that it ſhould rather be decided by thoſe, of whoſe Diſputes he undertook to judge. He cauſed the Emperor's Letter to be read, whereby he was appointed to be Judge. He promiſes them not to judge of any thing that ſhould not be clearly proved by either Party. He gave the Donatiſts leave to chuſe one to be Judge with him of that Cauſe.

Nothing remarkable was done in the ſecond Meeting on the 3d. of June. The Donatiſts having deſired time to examine the Acts of the firſt, Marcellinus granted it to them, and adjourned the Conference to the eighth Day of that Month.

An Accident happened about the manner of their Seſſion. Marcellinus having deſired the Biſhops to ſit down, the Donatiſts pretended, that it was forbidden by Scripture. The Catholick Biſhops would not keep their Seats, while the Donatiſt Biſhops were ſtanding. Marcellinus, out of Reſpect to the Biſhops, cauſed his Seat to be taken away.

In the eighth Day of the third Seſſion, the Donatiſts diſputed long about the Qualities of Oppoſers, and Defenders. But at laſt, St. Auguſtine obliged them to come to the main Queſtion, which was, where was the Catholick Church? The Donatiſts confeſſed, that that was it, which was ſpread throughout the whole Earth; and ſo they had only now to examine which Party was united with the Churches of other Parts of the World: and in this Point, the Catholicks had the upper hand. To divert the Queſtion, the Donatiſts deſired, that the Acts which they had in their Hands might be read: And ſo they entered upon the Examination of Cæcilian's caſe. They preſented a Memorial, wherein they affirmed, that the faults of every particular Member, infected a whole Community; and conſequently, that Cæcilian being guilty, the Catholicks were in the wrong for keeping with him, and that they had a ſufficient Reaſon to divide from him. This was the Point in Queſtion. St. Auguſtine anſwered it fully, proving out of Holy Scripture, that the Church upon Earth will always conſiſt of good and evil Members. He confirmed that Propoſition by St. Cyprian's Authority, and urged the Donatiſts Example againſt themſelves, alledging their Behaviour towards the Maximianiſts. After this, St. Auguſtine concludes, that though Cæcilian had been guilty, yet that argued nothing againſt the Cauſe of the Church.

The Councils.

Yet Marcellinus would have it examined, whether he was really guilty: His Innocence was proved, as well as that of Felix of Aptungis, who ordained him by Acts of the Judgments given in their behalf, whereby they had been pronounced guiltleſs of the Crimes lay'd to their Charge.

The fourth Conference being ended, and the Biſhops of both ſides withdrawn, Marcellinus gave Judgment for the Catholicks, whom he declared Conquerors; and the Biſhops being called in, he read it to them.

The Council of Cirta, or Zerta.

Of Cirta. 412.

THIS Council was aſſembled at Cirta, or rather Zerta, in June 412. The Council writ a Synodical Letter, to refute the falſe Rumours which the Donatiſts had ſpread abroad concerning the Conference at Carthage. This Letter is the 141ſt. amongſt St. Auguſtine's Letters.

The Firſt Council of Carthage, againſt Cœleſtius.

Of Carthage. 411.

COELESTIUS came from Rome, to Carthage, with a Deſign to be there ordained Prieſt in the Year 411. But his Error being diſcovered by Paulinus the Deacon, who formerly had been a Reader in the Church of Milan, he was put off to a Council of Carthage, held about the latter end of the Year 411, or the beginning of 412. by Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage. He was particularly asked, Whether he believed Original Sin. He would never acknowledge it as a matter of Faith; and affirmed, before the Council, that ſeveral Catholicks held, that Children were not born in Sin, but in the ſame State wherein Adam was, before he had offended God. The Biſhops of this Council being not able to make him alter his Opinion, excommunicated him, and he was forced to leave Africa. St. Auguſtine relates ſome Fragments of the Acts of this Council, in the Second Book of Grace, and Original Sin. Marius Mercator hath alſo written the Hiſtory of that Council.

Of Carthage. 411.

Of Jeruſalem. 415.

PELAGIUS, Cœleſtius's Tutor, being retired into Palæſtine, was well received by John of Jeruſalem, who had protected Rufinus, whoſe Diſciple Pelagius was: But Paulus Oroſius being then in that Country, and being well acquainted with Pelagius, and Cœleſtius's Errors, with the Judgments given againſt the latter, and with the Writings both of St. Jerome, and of St. Auguſtine againſt them, accuſed Pelagius in a Synod, or rather in a Conference held at Jeruſalem the 30th. of July in the Year 415. in the preſence of John, Biſhop of that City, who cauſed Pelagius though a Lay-Man, to come in, and ſhewed him much reſpect. Oroſius having oppoſed to him both St. Jerome, and St. Auguſtine's Authority, it was little regarded. He then accuſed him of believing, that Man may be without Sin. John of Jeruſalem affirmed, that if he maintained that Man could be free from Sin, without God's Help, that was indeed impious, but ſince he acknowledged that Man needeth Divine Succour, he could not be accuſed: And he asked Oroſius, whether he would deny the Aſſiſtance of God. Oroſius profeſſed, that he did not, and anathematized all thoſe that ſaid it; but he ſaw, that they underſtood not one another, and that the Interpreter was not faithful; ſo that he was obliged to ſay, that Pelagius was an Heretick; and that they ought to ſend him to thoſe Judges that underſtood Latin; and that John having declared himſelf, his Protector could not be his Judge. After ſeveral Altercations it was agreed, that they ſhould write to Pope Innocent about it. In the mean time, Oroſius coming to John, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, ſeven and forty days after, was called by him Heretick, and Blaſphemer; having affirmed, that Man could not be without Sin, no not with God's Grace. Oroſius gives an Account of this whole Matter, in his Apology; which certainly is an Ancient Monument.

HEROS, and Lazarus, two Biſhops of Gaul, who had been obliged to quit, the one the Biſhoprick of Arles, and the other, that of Aix, and to retire into the Eaſt, joined with Oroſius, to accuſe Pelagius; and drew up a Petition, containing the Errors whereof they accuſed him, which they pretended to be taken out of his Books, and maintained by Cœleſtius his Diſciple. This Accuſation was preferr'd to a Synod of Fourteen Biſhops, held at Dioſpolis, anciently called Lydda, a City of Palæſtine. Eulogius of Cæſarea was Preſident, and John of Jeruſalem held the ſecond Place. Though they were abſent, yet their Petition was read; (for one of them was very ſick at that time) and they queſtioned Pelagius about the Errors alledged againſt him. This Man anſwered all the Heads of his Accuſation, by diſowning all the Errors imputed to him, or by giving a Catholick Senſe in appearance, to what either Cœleſtius, or himſelf had aſſerted. Whereupon, the Synod abſolved him, as having ſufficiently anſwered the Charge of his Adverſaries. St. Auguſtine produces the Acts of this Council, in the Book of Pelagius's Acts; and there is an Abridgment of them in his 106th. Letter. He makes uſe alſo, of the Authority of the Fathers of this Council againſt Julianus. St. Proſper likewiſe quotes the Fathers of this Council with high commendation, for condemning Pelagius's Errors. Yet St. Jerome calleth this Council, a pitiful Aſſembly, becauſe they ſuffered themſelves to be impoſed upon by Pelagius's Diſſimulation.

HEROS and Lazarus were not contented to accuſe Pelagius before the Council of Dioſpolis, but they gave Oroſius Letters directed to the Biſhops of Africa; who, as they well knew, were leſs favourable to Cœleſtius and Pelagius. Theſe without receiving thoſe Letters, aſſembled both at Carthage, and at Milevis; where they condemned the Opinions attributed to Cœleſtius and Pelagius, and decreed, that the Authors of ſuch Doctrines were to be anathematized, unleſs they condemned their Errors very clearly. The Biſhops of both theſe Councils writ to Pope Innocent, to authorize their Deciſion by the Concurrence of the See of Rome: Their Letters were followed by another from five Biſhops, who writ by themſelves to the Pope about the ſame Subject. Theſe Letters are the 175th. 176th. and the 177th. among St. Auguſtine's Letters. The Pope anſwered them, and approved the Judgment of the African Biſhops; as appears by his Letters dated the 25th. of January 417.

Of Carthage. 417.

THE Biſhops of Africa having received Zoſimus's Letter, aſſembled about the latter end of the Year 417. to deliberate about what they ſhould do. They anſwered him immediately, that he was to blame, for offering to re-examine the Cauſe of Pelagius and Cœleſtius, which had been judged, and proteſted againſt whatſoever he might do in their behalf, without hearing them. This Letter is not extant, but it is mention'd in the 3d. Letter which Zoſimus writ to them. After the firſt ſtep, they collected all that had been done againſt Cœleſtius; and having confirmed the ſame, they ſent it to Pope Zoſimus by the Subdeacon Marcellinus: And further, they deputed Biſhop Vindemialis to carry it to Court. To this Synod muſt be referred what Proſper ſaith in his Chronicon upon the Year 418. and elſewhere, that it conſiſted of Two hundred and fourteen Biſhops. They wrote a long Letter to the Pope; wherein they complained, that he did too eaſily believe Cœleſtius; telling him, that he ſhould have been obliged to revoke his Errors by Name. They diſcovered the Evaſions which he uſed to elude the difficulty, by equivocal Terms. They ſent him a Memorial of thoſe Errors, whereof they were to exact of him a clear and preciſe Condemnation; and exhorted him to maintain what was done by his Predeceſſor. Father Queſnel believes, not without probability, that in this Synod were concluded the Nine Canons concerning Grace; which are commonly aſcribed to the Council of Milevis. But if they were propoſed in this Council, they were not concluded upon nor ſubſcribed till that which was aſſembled in May next Year, to which the Code of African Canons attribute them. The Endeavours of the Africans had good Succeſs; for the Emperor Honorius made an Edict againſt Pelagius and Cœleſtius, the laſt day of April, 418. And ſhortly after, Pope Zoſimus publiſhed as we have ſaid, his Sentence againſt them.

Of Carthage. 418.

THE African Biſhops willing to confirm what they had done againſt Pelagius and Cœleſtius, aſſembled upon the firſt Day of May of the Year 418. and made Eight Canons againſt the Pelagian Errors, and ſome other Orders about the Buſineſs of the Donatiſts.

The Firſt pronounceth an Anathema againſt any who dares affirm, that Adam was created Mortal; ſo that he muſt have died, whether he had ſinned or not, becauſe his Death was not an Effect of Sin, but a Law of Nature.

The Second likewiſe declares an Anathema againſt ſuch as deny, that Children ought to be baptized as ſoon as they are born; or ſuch as own that they may be baptized, and yet affirm, that they are born without Original Sin.

In ſome places there is a third Canon, which is an Addition to this; wherein thoſe that affirm, that there is a particular place, where Children dead without Baptiſm do live happily, are condemned; and to this Notion is oppoſed what our Saviour ſaith, that none can enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, except he be regenerate of Water and the Holy Spirit. Photius citeth this Canon in his Collection. It is found in another Manuſcript, and in the Code of the Romiſh Church, publiſhed by Father Queſnel. And laſtly, St. Auguſtine ſeems to own it, when he ſays, that the difference which the Pelagians made betwixt Eternal Life and the Kingdom of Heaven, had been condemned in an African Council; yet this Canon is not found in the ancient Code of the African Church. The Collectors of this Canon have not own'd it, and in the Chapters about Grace attributed to Pope Cœleſtine, the 3d, 4th, and 5th. Canons are cited, which ſhould be the 4th, 5th, and 6th, if this were the third. Perhaps this Canon was added, or look'd upon as an Explication of the foregoing.

nounces Anathema againſt all that ſhould ſay, that the Grace which juſtifies Man through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, doth only remit Sins committed; but that it is not given to ſuccour Man that he may ſin no more.

The Fourth expounds the Nature of this Grace, by condemning thoſe who ſhould ſay, that it doth no further help us, than as it gives us the knowledge of what we ought to do, but not by enabling us to fulfil the Commandments, which it gives us the knowledge of.

The Fifth is againſt thoſe that hold, that Grace is given only that we may do that which is good with leſs difficulty; becauſe one may abſolutely accompliſh the Commandments by the Power of his Free-Will, without the help of Grace.

The Sixth declares, that St. John did not ſay merely out of Humility; If we ſay that we have no Sin, we deceive our ſelves.

The contrary Truth is confirmed in the Seventh Canon, by theſe Words of the Lord's Prayer, Forgive us our Treſpaſſes, &c. And they are condemned who affirm, that the Righteous do not ſay this Prayer for themſelves, but for others.

In the Eighth there is a Condemnation of another way of eluding the Force of theſe Words, by ſaying, that the Righteous pray out of Humility, but not truly. It is ſaid, that God would never endure that Man who in his Prayers ſhould lye not only to Men, but to God himſelf; by asking with his Mouth, that God would forgive his Sins, and ſaying in his Heart that he had none.

After theſe eight Canons concerning Grace, ſome Orders are ſet down.

The Firſt is to reform the Fifth Canon of the Council of Carthage in the Year 407. whereby it was enacted, that thoſe Biſhops who converted any Donatiſts, ſhould have the Juriſdiction over them. This Order having bred ſome Diſputes, it was thought fit here to reform it; and it is enjoyn'd, that in what place ſoever any Donatiſts are reconciled, they ſhall be of the ſame Dioceſs with the Catholicks of that place.

When there were two Biſhops in the ſame place, namely, the ancient Catholick and the reconciled Donatiſt, it might occaſion ſeveral Difficulties, which the Council prevents in the next Canon, which enjoins, that the junior Biſhop ſhall make a diviſion of thoſe places where there were many Catholicks and Donatiſts, and that the Senior ſhall have his choice. That if there is but one place where the Catholicks and Donatiſts were intermixt, that Place ſhall belong to that Biſhop of the two, the place of whoſe reſidence is the neareſt; that if they prove equally diſtant, the Choice ſhall be left to the People. And if the ancient Catholicks deſire to have their own Biſhop, and the reconciled, him they had before, then the Majority of Voices ſhall carry it; but if they be equal, then the Senior ſhall have the Precedency. Laſtly, If the Places cannot be equally divided; As for example, if the number of Diviſions ſhould be odd, then two equal Diviſions ſhall be made, and the Place over and and above ſhall be diſpoſed of, as is ſaid juſt before.

The Councils.

In the third Rule it is provided, that whoſoever hath enjoy'd a place three Years, ſhall remain in quiet Poſſeſſion, if there be a Biſhop in the Church of that Dioceſs, where naturally he ought to have been.

The Fourth is againſt thoſe Biſhops who violently took Poſſeſſion of the Juriſdiction of ſuch places as they pretended to be of their Dioceſes, without having the matter in Diſpute adjudged by Biſhops.

The Firſt ordains, that thoſe that ſhall neglect to procure the Re-union of places dependent from their Dioceſes, ſhall be put in mind of it by the neighbouring Biſhops; that if they are not converted within ſix Months after ſuch Admonition, they ſhall belong to the Dioceſs of that Biſhop that can convert them; if it appears that the Biſhop of the place hath neglected it. It is added, that if a Conteſt happens betwixt two Biſhops of different Provinces, the Metropolitan of the Province where the place in Diſpute is ſituated ſhall appoint Judges, or the Parties ſhall chooſe one, or three.

This gives occaſion for renewing the Canon, which forbids any Appeal to be made from the Judgment of Judges thus choſen.

It is enacted by the ſeventh Order, that a Biſhop neglecting to reconcile the Donatiſts that are in his Dioceſs, ſhall be admoniſhed, and if they be not reconciled in ſix Months, they ſhall not communicate with him until he hath reconciled them. Provided always, that he who had the Execution of the Emperor's Orders was in his Province.

It is added in the Eighth, that if it be proved, that any Biſhop affirmed that theſe Donatiſts were come into the Communion of the Church, and it was not ſo, he ſhall loſe his Biſhoprick.

The Ninth enjoyns, that if the Prieſts, Deacons, and other Clerks, complain of their Biſhops Judgments, they ſhall be judged by the neighbouring Biſhops, with the conſent of their own; that if they appeal from this Judgment, it muſt be the Council of Africa, and it excommunicates thoſe that ſhall make their Appeals to Judges beyond the Seas.

The Tenth contains an Exception from that Prohibition of veiling a Virgin before the Age of Five and twenty, when being in danger of Death, ſhe deſires it, or her Parents for her.

Laſtly, that they might not too long detain the Biſhops out of their Dioceſes, they choſe three out of each Province, and gave them Power to order all things with Aurelius, who is deſired to ſubſcribe the Canons and Rules now mentioned; which were alſo ſubſcribed by all the Biſhops.

Of the Council of Tella or Zella, and ſome other Councils of Africa.

Of Tella. 418.

AMong the African Councils, is reckoned one held the 22d of February in the Year 418. at Tella or Zella; whereof a Decree is produced which confirms the fourth Letter attributed to Pope Syricius, and under whoſe Name ſome Canons are found in the Collection of Ferrandus the Deacon. They do not agree about the Name of the place where this Council was celebrated. It is ſaid in the beginning, that it was aſſembled at Tella; ſome think that it ſhould be Zella, inſtead of Tella; becauſe ſome Canons are quoted under that Name by Ferrandus.

Sirmondus thinks that we ſhould read Telepta, becauſe Donatianus of Telepta preſided; yet all Editions conſtantly call this the Council of Tella, and we read in the Notitia of the Proconſular Province of Africa, that there was a City called Tella in that Province, which was a Biſhop's See. This City differs from Telepta, and from Zella, which were in the Province of Byzacena. And though Ferrandus citeth Canons under the Name of a Council of Tella and Zella, yet it doth not follow, that he believed it to be the ſame Council; on the contrary, it is probable, that the Canons regiſtred in his Collection under different Names, were made by different Councils.

Of Tella. 418.

But it is very likely, as Father Queſnel hath obſerved, that both the Council of Tella, and the Canons regiſtred in Ferrandus under that Name, are Suppoſititious.

For, Firſt, Tella being a City of the Proconſular Province, what likelihood is there that a Council of the Province of Byzacena ſhould be called there? and that Donatianus the Metropolitan of Byzacena ſhould preſide in it?

Secondly, Is it credible, that a numerous Council ſhould be aſſembled in February, at a time that a General Synod of Africa was ſummoned for the Month of May?

Thirdly,

The Councils.

Thirdly, Wherefore do they ſuppoſe that the Legates of the Proconſular Province ſhould aſſiſt at a Council of the Province of Byzacena?

Fourthly, This Council is ſuppoſed to have been aſſembled to receive the fourth Letter of Pope Syricius. This Letter is Spurious as we have ſhewed, and though it were not, How unlikely is it, that the Africans would go about to confirm it ſo late? Is there any Example of their ſo doing? What reaſon had they to do it? Why ſhould they make uſe of the Pope's Letter written ſeveral Years before to make Regulations by?

In the Fifth place, Some of the Canons in Ferrandus's Collection, under the Name of the Council of Tella, do not ſuit with the African Cuſtoms. That in the 6th. Ch. forbids One Biſhop alone to ordain another Biſhop, except the Biſhop of Rome. The African Biſhops had been far enough from approving this Exception ſo contrary to the Canons, and to Cuſtom. The others are taken out of Syricius's Epiſtle againſt the Africans pertinaciouſneſs, who did not own the Canons of other Churches, except thoſe of the Council of Nice, and ſuch as had been made in African Councils. As for the other Canons cited under the Name of the Council of Tella, or Zella, they may be true, and it is probable that they are of another Council; namely, thoſe that are in the 3d. 16th. 65th. 68th. and 218th Chapters. The others are in the 4th. 6th. 30th. 138th. and 174th. Chapters.

The Councils.

There is mention in this Council, of another Council held at Thisdry, under whoſe Name there are two Canons in Ferrandus the Deacon's Collection, Ch. 76th, and 77th. In this Collection there are likewiſe ſome Canons of other African Councils, of which we have no other knowledge. The Learned Baluzius collected them in his new Collection of ſuch Councils as were omitted in the preceding Collections. Vol. 1. Page 366. and 367.

Councils of Carthage in the Years 418. and 419. concerning the Cauſe of Apiarius.

Urbanus Biſhop of Sicca, a City of Mauritania Cæſarienſis, and formerly St. Auguſtine's Diſciple, did both degrade and excommunicate Apiarius, a Presbyter, as one that had been unlawfully ordained. This Man repaired to Pope Zoſimus, who received him kindly, and admitted him to the Communion. This Pope's Action, contrary to the Rules of the Church, that forbid Biſhops to receive thoſe Clerks that are excommunicated by their Brethren, amazed the African Biſhops. But Zoſimus ſeeking an Opportunity to extend his Dominion and increaſe his Authority, would not let this Occaſion ſlip. Wherefore he ſent Legates into Africa, a Biſhop called Fauſtinus, and two Prieſts, Aſellius and Philip; not only to cauſe Apiarius to be reſtored, but alſo to make them admit of the Canons of the Council of Sardica, concerning the Appeals of Biſhops to the See of Rome, and the Judgments of Clerks.

The Africans ſeeing that the Pope undertook to protect Apiarius, judged it more convenient to accommodate the buſineſs; and ſo they found this Medium, to put him out of the Church of Sicca, and give him leave to do the Functions of his Order any where elſe. But before they came to a concluſion, ſuſpecting that Zoſimus's Legates were not come into Africa without ſome Deſign, they urged them to give an Account of their Commiſſion. At firſt they would have made ſome Propoſals of their own; but the Africans without Heſitation, deſired to ſee the Writings of their Commiſſion, and ſo they were obliged to read the Memorial of their Inſtructions; which contained four Heads. the Firſt was, touching Appeals to the See of Rome. The Second, to hinder Biſhops from going to Court. The Third, that Prieſts ſhould be permitted to have their Cauſes examined by Neighbouring Biſhops. By the Fourth they were commanded, either to excommunicate Urbanus Biſhop of Sicca, or to cite him to Rome, except he retracted what he had done. The Second Head admitted no Diſpute; becauſe the African Biſhops had already enacted, that neither Biſhops nor Prieſts ſhould go to Court. They anſwered the Fourth, by compoſing the buſineſs as we have ſaid; ſo that only the Firſt and the Third remained to be decided, and they were of great conſequence. The Pope's Legates alledged to ſupport their Pretenſions, the Canons of the Council of Sardica, which allow Appeals to the See of Rome for Biſhops condemned by a Provincial Synod, and permit a Clerk condemned by his own Biſhop, to appeal to the Biſhops of the Neighbouring Provinces.

Though the Africans had no knowledge of theſe Canons, yet becauſe the Pope's Legates poſitively urged them, they promiſed, out of the reſpect they paid to that Council, to obſerve the Canons, until they were inform'd whether they were belonging to the Council of Nice, or no. This was their reſolution in the firſt Council held about that buſineſs at Carthage in Autumn of the Year 418. which they acquainted Zoſimus withal.

Of Carthage. 418. 419.

After this Pope's Death, the Biſhops of Africa being aſſembled in an Univerſal Synod at Carthage the 23d. day of May, to the number of 217. Fauſtinus the Pope's Legate ſitting in that Synod, next after Aurelius Biſhop of Carthage, and Valentinus Metropolitan of Numidia, and Aſellius and Philippus the Prieſts after the Biſhops, the Canons of the Council of Nice were read, as they had the Copies of them on both ſides. The Africans not finding in their Code the Canons which the Pope's Legates affirmed to have been enacted by the Council of Nice, Alypius propoſed, that they ſhould ſend Deputies to the Biſhops of Conſtantinople, Alexandria, and Antioch, to clear this Diſpute, by taking Copies of the true Acts of the Council of Nice: This Advice was approved, and they concluded, that in the mean time they ſhould obſerve the Contents of thoſe Canons: And they reſolved to write to Pope Boniface about what they had done, and to pray him to write to the Eaſtern Patriarchs, that this Point might be cleared. This being done, they repeated the Creed and the twenty Canons of the Council of Nice, according to the Copy which Cæcilian Biſhop of Carthage, had brought from that Council whereat he aſſiſted. They added to theſe, three and thirty other Canons conformable to thoſe of the Council of Nice. The firſt is only an Advertiſement of Aurelius, concerning the Canons of the Council of Nice. The ſecond is a Confeſſion of the Holy Trinity. The third confirms the Rule of the Council of Carthage of the Year 401. concerning the Celibacy of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons. It is ſaid, that their Miniſtry obligeth them to it. Fauſtinus confirms this Order in the fourth Canon. The fifth is againſt the Covetouſneſs of the Clergy, that uſurp upon their Brethren. The ſixth reneweth the Law which forbids the Prieſt to conſecrate the Holy Chriſm, and to reconcile Penitents publickly, and to conſecrate Virgins. The eighth gives a Prieſt leave to reconcile Penitents in caſes of neceſſity. The ninth provides that the Accuſation of one that is guilty of any Crime ſhall not be admitted againſt a Biſhop. The next is againſt either Biſhops or Prieſts, who receive a Perſon excommunicated by his Biſhop, without his conſent.

Both the tenth and the eleventh pronounce an Anathema againſt thoſe Prieſts, who being reproved by their Biſhops, are ſo bold as to raiſe an Altar againſt an Altar, or make a Schiſm.

The twelfth ſettleth the neceſſary number of Judges, to decide Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes. A Biſhop is to be judged by twelve Biſhops; a Prieſt, by ſix Biſhops, with his reſpective Biſhop; and a Deacon by three only. The thirteenth Canon reneweth the ancient Laws about Biſhops Ordinations; namely, that a Biſhop cannot be ordained without the Primate's conſent; and that three Biſhops at the leaſt muſt be preſent at the Ordination. In the fourteenth, there is an Exception of the twelfth for the Province of Tripolis, where there were few Biſhops, declaring, that in this Province a Prieſt may be judged by five Biſhops, and a Deacon by two: and for the ſame reaſon, they ſay, that one Deputy may ſerve.

To maintain Eccleſiaſtical Authority among Clerks, The fifteenth forbids them to make their Complaints before Civil Judges, when they are cited before Eccleſiaſtical ones, and in caſe they do, tho' they get the better, yet they muſt be depoſed, if it be a Criminal Buſineſs; and if it be a Civil Matter, they ſhall loſe what they have got. It was alſo provided by theſe Canons, that if the Sentence of the firſt Eccleſiaſtical Judges, was reverſed by a Superior Judgment; yet this ſhall do no Prejudice to the former Judges, except they are convicted of having given Judgment out of Paſſion or Favour. It is added, that there can be no Appeal from choſen Judges, though they were fewer in Number than is appointed. Laſtly, Prieſts Children are forbidden to exhibit Publick Spectacles, or to be preſent at any; they declare alſo, that the ſame ought to be forbidden all Chriſtians.

The ſixteenth forbids Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons to be Farmers, Attornies, or to get their Living by any ſordid Commerce. Readers are obliged to marry when they come to the Age of Puberty, or to make a Vow of Continency. Clerks are not to take uſe for Money lent. They will not have Deacons to be ordained, nor Virgins conſecrated before they are five and twenty Years old. Laſtly Deacons are forbidden to ſalute the People; that is, to ſpeak to the People in Reading, as Biſhops were wont do in Preaching.

The 17th. grants to the Province of Sileſia, that had been ſeparated from Numidia, the Right of having a Primate, or Metropolitan, but dependent upon the Primate of Numidia. The 18th. enjoyns, that Biſhops ordaining either Biſhops or Clerks, ſhall make them underſtand the Canons. It forbids the giving the Euchariſt to the Dead, and renews the Order of the Council of Nice, about the Celebration of Provincial Councils.

The 19th. ordains, that whoſoever accuſes a Biſhop, muſt do it before his Metropolitan; who ſhall cite him to appear within a Month before him, and before the Judges whom he hath choſen: that in the mean time the Biſhop ſhall not be ſuſpended from the Communion: that if at the Month's end he gives good Reaſons for his not appearing, he ſhall have another Month; but if he doth not appear at his ſecond Summons, he ſhall be ſuſpended from the Communion until he hath juſtified himſelf: and, that if afterwards he comes not to the Univerſal Council, he ſhall be look'd upon as having condemned himſelf: that the Accuſer is not to be kept from Communicating, if he appears upon all Set-days; but upon his withdrawing, he ſhall be ſuſpended, but yet ſo as not to hinder his Proſecution. Laſtly, they forbid the admitting of a noted Perſon to form an Accuſation, except it be concerning his particular Intereſt.

The 20th. gives Rules for the Judgment of Prieſts and Deacons; but other Clerks are left to the ſole Judgment of the Biſhop.

The 21ſt. forbids Clergy-mens Sons to marry Heretical or Heatheniſh Wives.

The 22d. hinders Clerks to give their Eſtates to Hereticks though they were their Relations.

The 23d. forbids Biſhops to go out of Africa without leave from the Metropolitan of their reſpective Province from whom they are to receive a formed Letter, or a Letter of Recommendation.

The 24th. prohibits the Reading of any other beſides Canonical Books in the Church, whereof the Catalogue there ſet down agrees with that of the Council of Trent. It is noted at the latter end of this Canon, that the Contents thereof are to be notified to Boniface, and the Biſhops of Italy, that they may confirm it: and that the African Church hath learned from her Fathers Tradition, that the Books expreſſed in that Catalogue, ought to be read in the Church.

The 25th. confirms the Law of Celibacy, for the Superior Orders; and it extends it to Subdeacons, but other Clerks are left at their liberty.

The 26th. forbids the Selling the Goods of the Church, or of Biſhops, without the Metropolitan's leave, unleſs there be an urgent Neceſſity; in which caſe they are to adviſe with the neareſt Biſhops.

The 27th. provides, that Prieſts and Deacons ſhall not be put to publick Penance; and, that ſuch as were re-baptized, ſhall not be promoted to the Prieſthood.

The 28th. forbids thoſe Prieſts and Deacons who find fault with the Judgments of their own Biſhops, to ſeek for Judges out of Africa; but they are permitted to have their Cauſe examined by neighbouring Biſhops, but with the Conſent of their own Biſhop: wherein this Canon differs from that of Sardica, which gave Clerks leave indifferently to chuſe neighbouring Biſhops for their Judges, without ſeeking for the Conſent of their own Biſhop.

The 29th. declares, that he condemneth himſelf, by ſuffering himſelf to be excommunicated by an Eccleſiaſtical Judgment, who neglects to appear, and yet doth not forbear Communicating before he is heard.

The 30th. ſaith, that if the Accuſer hath ſome reaſon to fear any thing in the place where the Accuſed dwelleth, he may chuſe a place hard-by to produce his Witneſſes.

The 31ſt. puniſhes thoſe Clerks who refuſe to be promoted to Superior Orders by their Biſhops, by depriving them of the Functions of their Miniſtry.

The 32d. declares, that the Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, who being poor when they were ordained, have afterwards purchaſed Eſtates out of the Church's Revenue, ought to be dealt withal like thoſe who detain other Mens Eſtates unlawfully gotten, except they bequeath them to the Church: but they are permitted to do what they pleaſe with ſuch Eſtates as come to them either by Succeſſion or by Donation. Finally,

The 33d. and laſt forbids Prieſts to ſell the Church's Goods unknown to the Biſhops: and the Biſhops, without acquainting the Council and their Prieſts with it: even the Metropolitan is not permitted to uſurp what belongs to his Church. This is what was enacted in the firſt Seſſion of this Council. Afterwards the Canons of the former African Councils were read, in the ſame order in which we ſee them in the Code of the African Church.

The laſt Seſſion of this General Council was upon the 28th. of May, of the ſame Year. Several Biſhops complained, that they were kept there too long, and ſo deſired to return to their Dioceſes: wherefore they nominated Deputies of each Province to compleat what remained yet to do; but before they ſeparated themſelves, they added ſix Canons more to the former.

The 1ſt. forbids the receiving the Accuſation of an accuſed Perſon.

In the 2d. they would not have ſuch admitted for Accuſers as are Slaves, or Freed-men, nor infamous Perſons, as Mimicks, or Stage-Players, no more than Hereticks and Heathens.

In the 3d. it is provided, that if the Accuſation conſiſt of ſeveral Heads, and the Accuſer cannot prove the firſt, he ſhall not be ſuffered to propoſe the reſt.

The 4th. preſcribes the Qualifications of Witneſſes, according to what hath been ſaid of Accuſers; that is, that whoſoever was not qualified to be an Accuſer,

The Councils.

Accuſer, could not be admitted for a Witneſs: adding, that the Domeſticks of an Accuſer could not be Witneſſes, nor ſuch as were under the Age of thirteen Years.

The 5th. provides, that if a Biſhop declares that ſuch a Perſon hath confeſſed a Crime to him alone, and that Perſon denies it, and refuſes to do Penance; that Biſhop ought not to think that Injury is done to him, if the thing is not believed upon his Word, though he ſaith, that he will not communicate with that Perſon, out of a Scruple of Conſcience. The next Canon adds, that in this caſe, if the Biſhop will not communicate with that Perſon, the other Biſhops ſhall not communicate with that Biſhop; that ſo Biſhops may not offer to ſay what they cannot prove. Theſe Canons ſhew, that Crimes were confeſſed to Biſhops; and that the Biſhops excommunicated Men, and put them to publick Penance for thoſe Crimes, though they were ſecret ones; but that the Biſhop could not oblige thoſe outwardly to do publick Penance, who had confeſſed their Crimes ſecretly to him, unleſs he had other Proofs to convict them.

After this, Aurelius concluded the Synod, putting off to the next day the writing to Boniface. All the Biſhops ſubſcribed and approved what had been done and read in the Synod.

The next day they compoſed the Letter to Boniface; wherein the African Biſhops gave him an Account of what had been done about the Memorial of Inſtructions which Zoſimus had given to his Legates; and promiſed him to ſee the two Canons of the Council of Sardica executed, concerning the Appeals of the Clergy, and the Judgments thereupon, until they had received out of Greece the true Copies of the Council of Nice; upon Condition, that if theſe Canons were not there, they would not endure this new Yoke, which ſeemed to be an Effect of Ambition; and that they ſhould be ſuffered to enjoy their ancient Privileges.

Theſe Copies were not long in coming; they received them in November of the ſame Year, with obliging Letters from St. Cyril, and Atticus of Conſtantinople; but they did not find the Canons alledged by Zoſimus's Legates, but only the Confeſſion of Faith, and the twenty ordinary Canons. They had no ſooner received them, but they ſent the ſame to Pope Boniface.

This ſeemed to have put an end to the Diſpute; and indeed, it was not ſpoken of any more in Boniface's time, but it was renewed under the Pontificate of Pope Cœleſtine. For this Apiarius, to whom the African Biſhops had ſhewed Kindneſs for the Pope's ſake, inſtead of behaving himſelf wiſely, gave great occaſions of Complaint againſt him; ſo that they were obliged to condemn him. He failed not, to procure his Reſtoration, to apply himſelf to the ſame Means that had before proved effectual: he went to Pope Cœleſtine, who received him kindly, and admitted him to Communion: he wrote in his behalf to the African Biſhops, and ſent Fauſtinus to procure his Reſtoration. The African Biſhops met to judge him. At firſt he rejected their Judgment, under pretence of maintaining the Privileges of the See of Rome, and demanded to be admitted to the Communion, ſince Cœleſtine, to whom he made his Appeal, had admitted him. This Oppoſition, back'd by Fauſtinus, did not hinder the African Biſhops from undertaking the Examination of the Crimes laid to his Charge. At the third time of their Meeting, Apiarius confeſſed, 'that he was guilty of the 'Crimes he was accuſed of, ſo that there was no 'more need of Pleading.' But the African Biſhops ſeeing of what Importance it was, to prevent that for the future the African Councils ſhould not be thus impoſed upon, they writ a Letter to Pope Cœleſtine. In which having related in what manner Apiarius's Buſineſs was concluded, they intreated him earneſtly to hearken no more to thoſe that ſhould come from Africa, and not to admit any more to his Communion any Man that was excommunicated by the African Biſhops. 'For (ſay they) your Holineſs may 'take notice, that it was ſo decreed in the Council 'of Nice; and though mention is made there only 'of Clergy and Laity, yet there is a great deal more 'reaſon to obſerve this Rule, with reſpect to Biſhops; and it would prove a great Diſorder, 'ſhould your Holineſs allow Communion againſt the 'Rules to Biſhops excommunicated in their Provinces. Likewiſe, your Holineſs ought to reject 'thoſe Prieſts, and other Clergy-men who apply 'themſelves to you, to avoid the Puniſhment which 'they deſerve; ſo much the rather, becauſe we no 'where read that the Canons have taken away this Privilege from the African Church; and that according to the Decree of the Council of Nice, the 'Judgment of Prieſts, and of other Clerks, belongs to the Metropolitan. For the Fathers of that 'Council were wiſe and juſt enough to ſee that all 'Cauſes ought to be decided in theſe very places 'where they have their birth; and that each Province ſhall not want the Light of the Holy Spirit, 'which is neceſſary to direct and enable them to do 'Juſtice to their People; ſo much the rather, that 'every one who thinks himſelf wrong'd by the 'Sentences of Judges that are put upon them, may 'have their recourſe to a Synod, of that Province, 'or even to a National Council. Were it not great 'raſhneſs in any one of us, to believe that God can 'inſpire by his Spirit one ſingle Perſon to do Juſtice, and deny the ſame to a great number of Biſhops aſſembled in a Council? And how can it be 'imagined, that Judgment given out of the Country, and beyond the Seas, can ſtand, ſince it is often impoſſible to tranſport Witneſſes? they add, 'that they had ſent to Pope Boniface, Cœleſtine's 'Predeceſſor, the true Copies of the Council of 'Nice, where the Canons alledged by Fauſtinus are 'not found. They adviſe him to ſend no more Clerks 'into Africa to ſee his Judgments executed, leſt he 'ſhould ſeem to introduce into the Church, which 'breaths nothing but Humility, the Pomp and Va'nity of the Age; and then they intreat him, not 'to ſuffer Fauſtinus to abide any longer in Africa.

Of Ravenna. 419.

THIS Council was aſſembled at Ravenna, in April, 419. by Order of Honorius the Emperor, to judge betwixt Eulalius and Boniface, who diſputed about the See of Rome. For ſince the Biſhops could not agree, the Emperor purpoſed to call another more numerous Council, to which he invited Biſhops out of Gaul and Africa. In the mean while it was ordered in this, that Eulalius and Boniface ſhould keep out of Rome; and that Achilleus, Biſhop of Spoleto, ſhould take care of the Church till the Conteſt was ended. But Eulalius's Precipitation juſtified Boniface's Right, and was the cauſe that no other Council met upon that Subject. You may ſee what was ſaid about it in the Account of Pope Boniface.

Of Carthage. 420.

WHat we have ſaid hitherto concerning the Councils of Africa, celebrated in the beginning of the Fifth Century, ſufficiently ſhews, that the Vigilancy of thoſe Biſhops made them meet often, and gives reaſon to conjecture, that Yearly Councils were held at Carthage; but we

St. Auguſtine relates the ſame thing in his Treatiſe Of Hereſies, ch. 46. and the Author called Prædeſtinatus, hath not forgot to reckon this Meeting among the African Councils; but it may be that it was only an Aſſembly of Biſhops, like that wherein St. Auguſtine cauſed Heraclius the Prieſt to be elected his Succeſſor, which cannot be called a Council. The Council of Conſtantinople, in the Year 426.

Of Conſtantinople. 426.

THis Council was aſſembled by Theodoſius's Command, to ordain Siſinnius Biſhop-Elect of Conſtantinople, in the room of Atticus. Theodorus of Antioch was preſent, and there condemned the Maſſalian Hereſie by a Synodical Letter: And Neon's Opinion was, that as many as ſhould be convicted of favouring that Sect, ſhould be expelled, without hope of Re-admiſſion, whatſoever Promiſes they might make. The reaſon of that extraordinary Severity came from this, that thoſe Hereticks made no ſcruple of Abjuring their Sect, even with the moſt dreadful Oaths. This Synod is mentioned in the Council of Epheſus, where the Synodical Letter is confirmed, p. 3. Act. 7. Of Conſtantinople. 426.

The Council of Carthage, in the Year 427. againſt Leporius.

Of Carthage. 427.

Leporius, Prieſt and Monk of Marſeilles, embu'd with Pelagius's Errors, having likewiſe maintained that which Neſtorius publiſhed not long after, was driven out of Gaul: God's Providence directed him to Africa; where he was undeceived of his Errors by Aurelius and St. Auguſtine, who moſt charitably inſtructed him. After he was fully perſuaded of the Truth, they made him ſubſcribe a Confeſſion of Faith; wherein he ſharply condemned thoſe Errors which he had publiſhed, concerning the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, and made a clear Profeſſion of the Faith of the Church. Aurelius, St. Auguſtine, and ſome other Biſhops, being aſſembled, ſigned that Profeſſion, and wrote a Letter to Proculus of Marſeilles, and the other Biſhops of that Country, whereby they atteſted Leporius's Converſion, and intreated them to receive him charitably. This Leporius having been preſent at the Aſſembly which St. Auguſtine called at Hippo, to chuſe Heraclius for his Succeſſor, held at the latter end of the Year 426, could not be ſent back before 427. Of Carthage. 427.

The Council of Conſtantinople, in the Year 428.

Of Conſtantinople. 428.

Neſtorius having been choſen Biſhop of Conſtantinople, in 428. after Siſinnius's Death, Philip, an ancient Prieſt of the Church of Conſtantinople, found fault with ſome of Neſtorius's Sermons, and refuſed to communicate with him. This provoked Neſtorius, who cauſed him to be cited to his Council, and perſuaded Cæleſtius to accuſe him. But Philip being come to the Council, and Cæleſtius not appearing, Philip remained fully juſtified. This Council is ſpoken of in the Memorial which St. Cyril gave to Poſſidonius, and which was carried to Rome. Of Conſtantinople. 428.

Cyril Ep. ad Cæleſt. 1. p. Con. Ep. c. 14. Socr. l. 7. c. 32. In Mar. Mercator and in the Acts of the Council.

ABout the End of the Year 428, Neſtorius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, having permitted his Prieſt Anaſtaſius, and Dorotheus a Biſhop to preach arrogantly, that the Virgin Mary ought not to be called the Mother of God, and having himſelf maintained the ſame Opinion in ſeveral of his Sermons, brought a great deal of trouble into his Church. The People being much offended at this Doctrine, roſe againſt their Biſhop; Euſebius afterward Biſhop of Dorylæum, and ſome others of the Clergy publiſhed a Proteſtation againſt him, wherein they declared him an Heretick, and accuſed him of reviving the Error of Paulus Samoſatenus; the Prieſts alſo taught the contrary Doctrine. Proclus Biſhop of Cyzicum preach'd againſt Neſtorius's Opinions, but without naming him. Laſtly, the Clergy, the Monks, and People combined againſt Neſtorius; but on the other-ſide Neſtorius and his Party ſtoutly maintained what they had aſſerted, and ſtill preach'd the ſame Doctrine; and being upheld by the Authority of the Prince, they cruelly handled thoſe that oppoſed their Deſigns.

Act. conc. p. 1. c. 33. Act. conc. p. 1. c. 2. 1. p. of the Conc. c. 12.

This Diſpute ſoon ſpread it ſelf into Ægypt, whither Neſtorius's Party had ſent a Collection of his Sermons. The Monks of Ægypt were the firſt that moved theſe ſubtile Queſtions, and debated them among themſelves. St. Cyril Biſhop of Alexandria, who was of the contrary Judgment, perceiving that ſeveral of them defended the Party of Neſtorius, wrote a large Letter to theſe Monks, in which having admoniſhed them, that it were much better not to meddle with ſuch abſtracted Queſtions, which cannot be of any advantage; he declares himſelf againſt the Doctrine of Neſtorius without naming him, proving by ſeveral Reaſons, that the Virgin Mary ought to be called the Mother of God. This Letter being ſeen at Conſtantinople anger'd Neſtorius, who order'd a certain Perſon named Photius to anſwer it, and gave out a Report that St. Cyril governed his Church badly, that he affected a Tyrannical Power, ſtirred up Sedition againſt the Emperor's Officers, and was a Maintainer of the Manichees. Of Epheſus. 430.

Neſtorius's Letters were carried to Rome. St. Cæleſtine, and the Biſhops of Italy wrote to St. Cyril, to know whether they were Neſtorius's or not. Neſtorius ſeeing, that St. Cyril declared himſelf openly againſt him, complained much of his Carriage, and reſolved to have no Commerce with him for the future. St. Cyril to pacify him, wrote a Letter to him, wherein he tells that he was grieved to hear, that he was angry with him for the Letter, which he wrote to the Monks of Ægypt; but he ought to conſider, that it was not that Letter, that had raiſed ſuch Diſturbances in the Church, but the Papers which went about under his Name, that had cauſed ſo great a Scandal; that ſome Perſons would not call Jeſus Chriſt God, but the Organ and Inſtrument of the Divinity; that it was this that obliged him to write; that he had been ſent to from Rome, to know, who was the Author of thoſe Writings; that all the Weſt was in an Uproar about them; that he might appeaſe the Diſturbances by explaining himſelf; and retracting what was attributed to him; that he ought not to refuſe to give the Virgin Mary the Title of Conc. p. 1. c. 6.

the Mother of God, because by this means he would restore the Church's Peace.

p. 1. c. 7. This Letter was carried to Nestorius by one of St. Cyril's Priests, who was very urgent with him for an Answer to it. He gave him one, but without an Explication of his Doctrine, and telling St. Cyril, that though he had acted contrary to the Rules of Brotherly Charity, yet he would forget it, and did by this Letter give him the tokens of Union and Peace.

p. 1. c. 16. St. Cyril having informed Nestorius, that his Writings were carried as far as Rome, and that they met with an unwelcome reception there, Nestorius thought it his Duty to write to St. Cœlestine about it. And to do it the more handsomely, he took an Occasion to write to him about four Pelagian Bishops, Julian, Florus, Orontius, and Fabius, who had fled to Constantinople, and had presented their Petitions to the Emperor, in which they complained of the ill usage they had received in the West. He assures the Pope, that he had answered them according to his Office and Duty, although he was not informed of their Case; but that he ought to make it clear, that they may have no cause to importune the Emperor, and stir him up to have compassion on them; for if it be true, that they were condemned for endeavouring to make a new Sect, they deserved no manner of Pity. He adds, that having found at Constantinople some Persons who corrupted the Orthodox Faith, he laboured to recover them by gentle means, although their Heresie came very near Arius and Apollinaris's, for they confounded and mixed the two Natures in Jesus Christ, making the Divine Nature to be born of Mary, and the Flesh of Jesus Christ to be changed into his Godhead; that upon this ground they gave the Virgin the Mother of Christ, the Title of the Mother of God; that this term, although it be improper, might be endured upon the account of the Union of the Word with the Manhood, if it be not understood of the Divine Nature, and if we do not suppose, that the Virgin Mary is the Mother of the Word of God, which is intolerable. He sent this Letter with the Copies of his Sermons by Antiochus.

p. 1. c. 3. St. Cyril not being satisfied with Nestorius's Answer, wrote another Letter to him, wherein he delivers to him his own and the Church's Doctrine. And to gain the greater Credit to his Explication, he grounded it upon the Creed made by the Nicene Council, where it is said, That the only Son of God begotten of his Father from all Eternity, came down from Heaven, was made Man, suffered, rose again from the Dead, and is ascended into Heaven. He says, that we ought to be contented with this Decision, and believe, that the Word of God was Incarnate, and was made Man; that he saith not, that the Nature of the Word was changed into Flesh, nor the Flesh into the Nature of the Word, but that the Word was united by an Hypostatick Union to the Manhood; insomuch, that the same Jesus Christ is both the Son of God, and Son of Man, yet without any confusion of the Natures; that it may not be said, that the Virgin hath brought forth a Man into the World, into whom the Godhead is since descended; but that from the instant of his Conception the Godhead was united to the Manhood; insomuch, that it may be said, that God is born according to the Flesh, and in the same Sense that he hath suffered, and is dead, not as though the Word hath suffered in him, but because the Body, which he assumed, hath suffered, and was laid in the Sepulchre. In fine, that it is in this Sense that we say, that the Virgin is the Mother of God, because she brought into the World the Body of Jesus Christ, to which the Godhead is Hypostatically United. St. Cyril having thus explain'd himself, exhorts Nestorius to embrace these Sentiments, that he may preserve the Peace of the Church, and an uninterrupted Union among the Bishops.

p. 1. c. 9. This Letter raised the Dispute. Nestorius was highly offended, and in his Answer to it accuses St. Cyril of putting a false interpretation upon the Words of the Council of Nice, and broaching several Errors. He says, that he explains the Council of Nice ill, because this Council doth not say, that the Word was born, suffered or is dead, but it says this of our Lord Jesus Christ, the only Son of God, words which equally agree to the Humanity and Divinity. He commends St. Cyril for acknowledging the distinction of the two Natures in Jesus Christ; but he accuses him of destroying this Truth consequentially, and making the Godhead passible and mortal. He owns the Union of the two Natures, but he holds, that upon the account of that Union we may not attribute to either of them the Qualities that belong to the other only; and he affirms, that as often as the Scripture speaks of the Death and Passion of Jesus Christ, it appropriates them to the Humane, and never to the Divine Nature. Lastly, he tells him, that he hath been surprized by the Clergy, infected with the Heresie of the Manichees, who were at Constantinople, and had been deposed in a Synod for it.

The Councils.

Upon this Occasion it was, that the Adherents of Nestorius published the Book, which Photius wrote against St. Cyril's Letters to the Monks, with another Piece bearing this Title, Against those, who upon the Account of the Union debase the Godhead of the Son by Deifying the Manhood. These Writings were sent to St. Cyril by Buphas Martyrius a Deacon of Alexandria, and St. Cyril's Agent at Constantinople.

Act. 1. p. 6. 12. Nevertheless Anastasius the Priest pretended not to disapprove wholly of St. Cyril's Letter to the Monks, and alledged this Reason, that he confessed in that Letter that no Council had mentioned the term of the Mother of God. St. Cyril being afraid that those of his Party who were at Constantinople, should be ensnared by this Artifice, wrote a large Letter upon that Subject, wherein he labours to prove that Nestorius and his Party divided Jesus Christ into two Persons. He advises them to give this Reply to those that accuse them of troubling the Church, and not submitting to their Bishop. That 'tis their Bishop that is the cause of this trouble and scandal, because he teaches strange Doctrine. In the next place he complains of his behaviour towards him, and of the Calumnies they made use of to defame him. He says, that he is ready to defend himself before any Judicature, but yet he was not against Peace, provided the Orthodox Faith be secured. Lastly, He tells them that he had sent them again the Petition, which they had sent to him, but he had changed and mollified the Terms, lest Nestorius should say that he had accused him before the Emperor; that in that which he had framed, he had rejected Nestorius, as being his Enemy; he desires them to present this Petition if need be, and says, that if Nestorius goes on still to persecute him, he will send some wise and prudent Persons to defend his own and the Church's cause, being resolved to suffer the utmost rather than abandon it. He wrote also at the same time two Letters p. 1. c. 10. 11. to justifie himself, that he had engaged in this affair against Nestorius, because he thought himself obliged to do it for the defence of the Faith. He says, that 'twas not he, but Nestorius that was the Cause of the Trouble, and that 'twas not he, but Nestorius that had hindred, that Peace was not again restored to the Church.

Nestorius not receiving an Answer from Pope Cœlestine, wrote another Letter to him, in which he earnestly desires him to give him an Answer about the Case of those Bishops, of whom he wrote to him. He speaks also of those pretended Hereticks, who confounded the two Natures in Jesus Christ, and attributed to the Manhood that which agrees only to the Divine Nature, and to the Godhead that which belongs to the Humane Nature only. This Letter was carried to Rome by Count Valerius.

Cœlestine had not returned an Answer to Nestorius's first Letter, because he thought it necessary to translate and examine the Sermons, which he sent him. It is probable, that this Task was imposed upon Cassian, and indeed, the Books of this Author against Nestorius were made about this time, and are written as we have observed, against one of Nestorius's first

The Councils. p. 1. c. 14.

Sermons. St. Cyril ſuſpecting that Neſtorius might have written to Rome, ſent Poſſidonius thither with a Letter, in which he relates all that had paſſed to that time in the buſineſs of Neſtorius. About the end of the Letter, he tells St. Cœleſtine, that he did wait for his Judgment to determine, whether he ſhould receive Neſtorius to Communion, which for that reaſon he had neither hitherto granted him, nor abſolutely refuſed. Laſtly, he exhorts him to let them know his Opinion in the Eaſt, that all the Churches might be united, and joyn together in one and the ſame Doctrine.

With this Letter he ſent ſome Papers, which contain'd the principal Heads of Neſtorius's Doctrine. Beſides this he gave Poſſidonius a Paper of Inſtructions, which is publiſhed by M. Baluzius, in which he lays down Neſtorius's Doctrine after this manner. The Doctrine, or rather the Hereſie of Neſtorius is, to believe, that the Word of God foreſeeing, that the Perſon, who was to be born of Mary, ſhould be Holy and Great, did therefore make choice of him to make him to be born of a Virgin, and beſtowed ſuch Graces upon him, as that he was rightly called the Son of God, our Lord, and Chriſt; that he made him dye for us, and then raiſed him from the Dead; that this Word was Incarnate, becauſe he always was with the Man, as he alſo had been with the Prophets, but in a more ſpecial manner. That Neſtorius confeſſed, that he was with him in the Womb of the Virgin, but he will not acknowledge that he was a God by Nature, but he was called ſo upon the account of the extraordinary Favour which God had always ſhewed him, and that it was the Man that died and roſe again. After this manner St. Cyril delivers Neſtorius's Doctrine; which being done, he thus explains his own. We believe and confeſs, that the Word of God is immortal, yea Life it ſelf; but he became Fleſh, and being united with a Body, * animated with a Rational Soul, ſuffered in the Fleſh, as the Scripture ſays, and becauſe his Body ſuffered, we ſay, that he hath ſuffered, although he be of a Nature † incapable of Sufferings; and becauſe his Body is riſen, we ſay, He is riſen. But Neſtorius is not of that Judgment, for he ſays, that it is the Man, who is raiſed, and that it is the Body of the Man, which is offered to us in the Holy Sacrament. We believe on the contrary, that it is the Fleſh and Blood of the Word, that giveth Life to all Things. He ſays afterward, that Neſtorius had ſuborned Cœleſtius to accuſe Philip of being a Manichee, but Cœleſtius not daring to appear, Neſtorius had found out another pretence, and depoſed Philip for having celebrated the Sacrament in his Houſe, although all the Clergy of Conſtantinople ſaid, that it was a thing ordinarily done, as often as occaſion required.

Poſſidonius departed to go to Rome with theſe Inſtructions, but had order not to deliver St. Cyril's Letter to the Pope, unleſs he underſtood, that Neſtorius's Letter was come to his Hands.

Before Poſſidonius was arrived at Rome St. Cyril wrote to Acacius Biſhop of Beræa, that his Friend Neſtorius had given Scandal to all the Church, by ſuffering Dorotheus to deny, that the Virgin was the Mother of God, and maintaining that Doctrine. And that becauſe he would not abet that Error, Neſtorius had declared himſelf againſt him, and filled the World with Calumnies againſt his Reputation. He tells Acacius, that he was ſorry that ſuch a ſubtle and difficult Queſtion had e'er been ſtarted and preached to the People, for which Moral Diſcourſes and Inſtructions were much more ſuitable. Acacius anſwered, that he approved of this Judgment of St. Cyril, and that he was as thoroughly perſuaded as himſelf, that ſuch things ought not to be diſputed; but he adviſed him not to reprove, with ſo much paſſion, a word, which Dorotheus had ſpoken unawares and inconſiderately, for fear of embroyling the Church, and deſires him to appeaſe this Quarrel by his Silence, intimating to him, that it was the Opinion alſo of John Biſhop of Antioch.

Ibid. c. 23.

Poſſidonius being arrived at Rome, Pope Cœleſtine who had received Inſtructions from both ſides, had aſſembled a Council in Auguſt, Anno 430, in which after they had read, and examined Neſtorius's Writings, his Letters, and St Cyril's; they diſapproved Neſtorius's, and approved St. Cyril's Doctrine. We have a Fragment of the Acts of this Council, related in Arnobius's Conference with Serapion, which contains ſome part of St. Cœleſtine's Judgment, where ſome Paſſages of St. Ambroſe, St. Hilary and Damaſus are cited to prove, that it may ſaid, that the Son of God was born of a Virgin, that God was made Man; and that there is but one Son of God. They did not think it fit in this Council to condemn Neſtorius preſently; they order'd, that it ſhould be ſignified to him, that if within ten days after Notice of this Sentence, he did not condemn the New Doctrine, which he had introduced, and did not approve the Doctrine of the Churches of Rome and Alexandria, yea, of the Univerſal Church, he ſhould be depoſed and deprived of the Communion of the Church; and they alſo declared, that all the Clergy and Laity, who had ſeparated from Neſtorius, ſince he taught this Doctrine, were not excommunicate.

The Councils. I. A. Council at Rome.

In order to the Execution of the Decree of this Synod, Pope Cœleſtine wrote to St. Cyril, and by his Letter gave him Commiſſion to execute in his ſtead, as having his Authority, and being in his Place, the Sentence given againſt Neſtorius. He wrote alſo a Letter to Neſtorius, in which he oppoſes his Doctrine; tells him, that the Biſhops of whom he ſpake in his Letter, are Pelagians, who were condemned becauſe they would not acknowledge Original Sin, and gives him Notice of the Judgment given againſt him, declaring to him at the ſame time that he had commiſſioned St. Cyril to execute it in his Name. He alſo certified the Clergy of Conſtantinople of it, as alſo the Biſhops of the chief Sees, as John Biſhop of Antioch, Juvenal Biſhop of Jeruſalem, Rufus Biſhop of Theſſalonica, and Flavian Biſhop of Philipopolis, to whom he ſent a Circular Letter. St. Cyril before he would do any thing againſt Neſtorius wrote a Letter to John Biſhop of Antioch, and John Biſhop of Jeruſalem, to let them know how things had paſſed in the Weſt, and exhorting them to join with him either to make Neſtorius change his Opinion, or execute the Judgment paſſed againſt him by the Weſtern Biſhops, if he perſiſted in it.

Ibid. c. 21. 24.

John Biſhop of Antioch having received St. Cyril and Cœleſtine's Letters, and having communicated them to ſix Biſhops, which were then preſent with him, of whom Theodoret was one, foreſeeing the trouble which Neſtorius would raiſe, exhorted him by a Letter which he wrote on purpoſe, giving him all marks of Friendſhip, not to wonder at St. Cœleſtine's and St. Cyril's Letters, but yet not to ſlight this Affair, and adviſed him not to reject the Term of the Mother of God, which ſeveral Holy Men had already made uſe of; and ſo much the rather, becauſe this Diſpute had already created great Diſturbances in the Church, and was likely to make greater, becauſe he ſaw, that the Weſt, Ægypt, and perhaps Macedonia, were determined to ſeparate themſelves, unleſs they were ſatisfied about it; that heretofore Theodorus of Mopſueſta had recanted the way of Expreſſions which he had uſed publickly, that he might not give an occaſion of Scandal. Laſtly, he ſays, that he did not invite him to make a ſhameful Retractation, but knowing that ſeveral Perſons had heard him ſay, that he did not reject the good Senſe which might be given to this Term, The Mother of God, and that he would willingly call her by that Name, if ſome Perſons of Authority in the Church were of that Judgment; he exhorts him to uſe it, ſince no Eccleſiaſtical Author had condemned it, and ſeveral had uſed it. Neſtorius anſwered John Biſhop of Antioch, that many abuſing the Term of the Mother of God, and others not being willing to call the Virgin by any other Term than the Mother of Man, he thought it ſafeſt to chooſe the Term of the Mother of Chriſt.

The Councils.

2. A. Council in Egypt.

Notwithstanding this, St. Cyril called a Council in November, Anno 430. in Ægypt. In it they resolved upon the Execution of the Judgment pronounced by the Western Bishops against Nestorius, and they deputed four of them to signifie it to him, with a Synodical Letter, that in case he did not revoke his Errors, and profess the Doctrine of the Church within the time prescribed by St. Cœlestine's Letter, he should be degraded from his Priesthood. This Letter is dated Nov. 3. Anno 430. St. Cyril joyned to it a Confession of Faith, which he would have him make, and his twelve famous Anathema's.

The Confession of Faith, which he propounded to him, was that of the Council of Nice, to which he added an Explication of the Doctrine of the Church concerning the Incarnation more at large, to this Effect, That the Son of God was made Man, and born of a Virgin, yet without any change of the Natures, either of the Flesh into the Godhead, or of the Divine Nature into the Manhood, without any alteration or mixture; yet so, as that the Word being united with the Manhood, by an Hypostatick Union, makes but one Christ; that we may not divide the two Natures, nor look upon them as united merely by an Union of Dignity, Authority, or Affection; that we may not say, that he dwells in the Son of Mary as in another Man, nor call Jesus Christ a Man carrying a God; nor use these Expressions, nor any like them, I honour him who is invested with the Divine Nature, for his sake, who hath invested him with it; I adore the Invisible because of the Visible, &c. But we must acknowledge, that the Son of God hath suffered in his Visible Flesh, that he is sacrificed for us, is dead; and lastly, that the Virgin having brought forth a God hypostatically united with the Manhood, ought to be called the Mother of God. This long Confession of Faith (for the Articles which we have mentioned, are laid down at large) is attended with twelve Anathema's.

St. Cyril's twelve Anathema's

The First is against him that doth not confess, that the Person, who in Isaiah is called Immanuel, i. e. Jesus Christ, is a true God, and that the Virgin is upon that account the Mother of God, because she brought into the World the Word incarnate according to the Flesh.

The second is against him that doth not acknowledge, that the Word of the Father being hypostatically United to the Flesh makes one Jesus Christ with his Flesh, and that he is altogether God and Man.

The third is against him, that divideth the Natures after the Union, or allows them only an Union of Dignity, Authority, and Power, and not a natural Union.

The fourth is against those, who attribute that which is spoken of Christ in Holy Scripture, to God or Man separately.

The fifth is against him who calls Jesus Christ, a Man bearing-God, and not a true God, and the Natural Son of God, because being Incarnate he partakes of the same Flesh and Blood with us.

The sixth is against him that asserts, that the Word of God is the God of Christ.

The seventh is against him, who says, that Jesus Christ, as he was Man, was moved by the Word, and was cloathed with his Glory, as being a Person distinct from him.

The eighth is against him who asserts, that we ought to worship the Manhood with the Word, and will not give the same Adoration to Immanuel, i. e. to Word Incarnate.

The ninth is against him who says, that Jesus Christ did Miracles by the power of the Holy Spirit, and not by his own.

The tenth is against him, who affirms, that it is not the Word that is our High-Priest and Apostle, who was sacrificed for us, but it is the Man, who dyed for himself, and for us.

The eleventh is against him who denies, that the Flesh was the Living Flesh of the Word, but the Flesh of the Man united with the Godhead by a Moral Union, because it dwells, and inhabits in it.

The twelfth is against him, who will not say, that the Word hath suffered truly in his Flesh, and that he dyed, and rose again according to the Flesh.

The Councils.

About this time also St. Cyril wrote his three Treatises about the Incarnation. One of which he dedicated to the Emperor, and the other two to the Empresses Eudocia and Pulcheria, in which he explains, and proves his Doctrine at large. 1 p. Act Conc. c. 3; 4, 5.

Before the Sentence of Cœlestine, and St. Cyril's Letter were signified to Nestorius, he fore-seeing the Storm, which was about to fall upon him, desired Theodosius that he would call a Council. And since Ibid. c. 20. his Anger against the Monks of Constantinople, who were not of his Party, increased every day more and more, they also petitioned, that a Council might be assembled, and in the sequel addressed the Emperor, praying him, that the Governor of Constantinople would restrain the Outrages committed against them, till the Matter were determined by a Council. Theodosius seeing, that a Council was desired by both sides, and believing it necessary to appease the Troubles of the Church, appointed it at Ephesus on Pentecost in the following year. The Circular Letter, which he wrote to invite the Chief Metropolitans to it, bears date Nov. 19. Anno 430. In it he says, that it was his Duty to provide for the Ibid. c. 31. Peace and Welfare of the Church, to hinder, that it be not troubled with Schisms and Divisions, to provide that Religion be preserved in its Purity, and that the Clergy and Bishops live an unblameable Life. In this Letter he doth not alledge any particular Reason, why he called this Council, but only tells the Bishops, that it was for the Good of the Church, and that they that did not come to it, could not be excused neither before God nor Men.

The Fame of St. Austine induced the Emperor to require him in particular; and for that end wrote to him, although he was a Bishop but of a small City: but the Emperor's Letters not being received in Africa till about Easter, Anno 431. St. Austine was then dead, and the other African Bishops being encompassed with so many Enemies, could not come to the Council.

The Emperor wrote a Letter particularly to St. Cyril, to tell him, that he looked upon him as the Ibid. c. 31. Author of this Trouble, and therefore commanded (32.) him peremptorily to be present at the Council. He also particularly blam'd him for disturbing the Church, creating Divisions in the Royal Family by writing to the Empresses severally, for meddling with an Affair that nothing concerned him; for acting imperiously, and imprudently.

Nestorius also wrote to St. Cœlestine against St. In Marius Mercator. Cyril, and informs him, that Theodosius had appointed a General Council, and prays him to accommodate the Differences which were between those, who called the Virgin the Mother of God, and those who would give her no other Title than the Mother of a Man, by calling her the Mother of Christ.

In the mean while the four Bishops, deputed by the Council of Alexandria to signifie to Nestorius the Judgment passed against him by the Synod of Rome, arrived at Constantinople, and delivered the Letter of the Council into his own Hands in the presence of his Clergy, Decemb. 7. Anno 430. which was the Lords-Day. He put off their Answer till the next Day; but when he saw what it contain'd, he would see them no more, but still continued to preach after the same manner, as he had done before. He sent John Bishop of Antioch a Copy of the Letter, Confession of Faith, and 12 Anathema's of St. Cyril's; and desired him to set some Person to write against them, and himself opposed 12 other Anathema's to them.

In the first, he pronounces Anathema against him that says, That he that is called Immanuel in Scripture, is a God only, and not a God dwelling with us; that is to say, United to our Nature, which he took of Mary, against him that calls the Virgin the Mother of God, and not of Immanuel, or that ſays, That the Word is changed into Fleſh.

The ſecond is againſt them that ſaid, That by the Union of the Word and Fleſh, the Godhead hath received ſome alteration, or that it is united to the Fleſh in part only; or that ſaid, That the Godhead and Manhood in Jeſus Chriſt are of the ſame Nature.

The third is againſt thoſe who ſaid, That Jeſus Chriſt is one Son only made of two Natures, without any Mixture.

The fourth is againſt them who take that which is ſpoken concerning the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt in Scripture, as agreeing to one Nature only, and ſo attribute the Sufferings to the Word of God.

The fifth is againſt thoſe who dare affirm, That there is but one Jeſus Chriſt according to Nature.

The ſixth is againſt him who gives the Word, who was Incarnate, any other Name than that of Chriſt, or who makes the Nature of Man to be Uncreated, as that of the Word is.

The ſeventh is againſt him that ſaith, That the Perſon, who was born of Mary, is the only Son of God, and is not contented to ſay, That he became the Son of God by an Union with the only Son of God.

The eighth is againſt him who believes, That we muſt honour the Form of a Servant for it ſelf, and not becauſe it is united with the Nature of the Word.

The ninth is againſt him who ſaith, That the Form of a Man in Jeſus Chriſt, is Conſubſtantial with the Holy Spirit; and, That it had not the Power of doing Miracles by the Union that it had with the Word.

The tenth is againſt them who affirm, that the Word was ſacrificed, and ſuffered for us, and not Immanuel.

The eleventh is againſt them who ſaid, That the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt is enlivening of its own Nature as it is Fleſh.

The twelfth is againſt them, who attribute to the Word the Sufferings of the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt.

Theſe Anathema's of Neſtorius being publiſhed at Conſtantinople, were confuted by Marius Mercator, and John Biſhop of Antioch cauſed Andrew Biſhop of Samoſata, and Theodoret to write againſt St. Cyril's. He wrote alſo himſelf Circular Letters to condemn them. Coll. of Lupus, ch. 4.

The time for the aſſembling of the Council drawing nigh, the Biſhops began their Journey to preſent themſelves at Epheſus. St. Cyril went with almoſt 50 Biſhops of Ægypt; and being landed at Rhodes, he wrote the News of it to his Clergy and People. He arrived at Epheſus five or ſix Days before Pentecoſt, which was that Year upon June 7. Neſtorius alſo came about the ſame time with 10 Biſhops. Juvenal alſo arrived with ſome Biſhops of Paleſtine. But John Biſhop of Antioch, who was obliged to aſſemble his Biſhops to Antioch, who were almoſt 12 Days Journey diſtant from thence, and had above 30 Days Journey by the Land thither, could not get there ſo ſoon. He wrote a Letter of Excuſe to St. Cyril, and aſſured him, that he would be at Epheſus within five or ſix Days. Act Conc. p. 1. c. 33. and 34. Ibid. c. 36.

The Emperor ſent Count Candidian to the Council, that he might aſſiſt at it in his ſtead; not to meddle with Queſtions or Controverſies, which concerned the Faith, but to drive away the Monks and Laity, which came to Epheſus in throngs, and might raiſe Diſturbances there; to maintain the Order and Freedom of the Council without ſuffering any Heats or Conteſts; to hinder the Biſhops from going from Epheſus to Court, or elſewhere; and to oblige them to define and determine the Queſtions in debate before they ſtarted any others. And this did the Letter ſent to the Council declare to be the ſubſtance of his Commiſſion, wherein 'tis alſo ſaid, that ſhall not bring any Criminal, or Pecuniary againſt the Biſhops of the Council, neither in the Council, nor before the Judges of Epheſus; and that he hath permitted Count Irenæus, Neſtorius's Friend, to accompany him, nevertheleſs without allowing him any Share in the Commiſſion granted to Candidian. Ibid. c. 35.

The Councils.

Fifteen Days being paſt from the Day appointed for the Synod, the Eaſtern Biſhops having alſo ſent two Biſhops, who had aſſured them, that the reſt would ſoon be there, and that they would not take it ill, if the Council began without them. St. Cyril, and Juvenal Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and the Biſhops of Ægypt and Aſia, met in the Great Church of St. Mary. Ju. 22. although the Legates of the Holy See were not yet come; and notwithſtanding the Oppoſition of 68 Biſhops, who required them to ſtay till the arrival of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops St. Cyril was Preſident of this Council. We ſhall examine by and by, whether it was in his own, or in the Pope's Name. The Number of Biſhops, if we may believe what they have written themſelves, was near 200. The Orientals count but 50 out of Ægypt, 30 Aſian Biſhops, and ſome others. The Subſcriptions make it * evident, that there were 160 who ſigned it, becauſe there were ſome of thoſe, who at firſt oppoſed the holding of the Council, who did nevertheleſs joyn in it. Coll. of Lupus, ch. 7. * Credible.

After Peter the Chief Notary had in a few Words declared the Cauſe of the calling of this Council, they made him read the Emperor's Circular Letter ſent to the Metropolitans. Afterward Memnon having obſerved, that there had ſixteen Days paſſed ſince the day fixed by the Emperor's Letter; St. Cyril ſaid, that it was high time to begin the Council, and required that ſuch Papers ſhould be read as were uſeful for that end, and chiefly, Candidian's Commiſſion, which he had already peruſed; 'tis true, but he ſaid after, that he did it againſt his Will, and to know the Emperor's mind only, and not to begin the Council. But he demanded, that they ſhould ſtay till the Eaſtern Biſhops were arrived, ſaying, that it was the Emperor's deſign to to make it a General † Council, and not a particular and ſeparate Aſſembly. But becauſe they had no regard to his advice, he retreated, and immediately entred his Proteſtation againſt the Council. Act. 1. † Col. of Lupus. c. 9.

St. Cyril and the other Biſhops did not give over their Proceedings; and Theodorus Biſhop of Ancyra having repreſented it as a thing neceſſary, to * call Neſtorius before they read any thing, three Biſhops aroſe, and ſaid, that Yeſterday they had been with Neſtorius, and the ſix or ſeven Biſhops which were with him, and that they had adviſed them to come to the Council; but they could get no other Anſwer from them, but this, that they would think of it, and would come to it, if they judged it convenient: Wherefore they ſent others with a Summons in Writing to cite him to the Council. Florentius the Tribune, being accompanied with a Clerk of Neſtorius's anſwered them, that he will come to the Council when all the Biſhops are met. Theſe Biſhops having reported this Anſwer to the Council, they ſent other Biſhops to cite him the third time, according to the Canons, but they were not ſuffered to enter into Neſtorius's Houſe, and they could get no other reaſon from the Guards that were at his Gate, but this, that they had Order to keep any Perſon from entring that came from the Synod. This being reported to the Council, they began to enter upon the Diſcuſſion of their buſineſs. And after they had rehearſed the Nicene Creed, they read St. Cyril's ſecond Letter to Neſtorius, which was unanimouſly approved by them; the Anſwer of Neſtorius to it being alſo read, was rejected, and they pronounced an Anathema againſt it, and the Author of it. They cauſed alſo St. Cœleſtine's Letter, St. Cyril's third Letter, and his Anathema's to be read. Then they heard the Teſtimony of Theodotus of Ancyra, who depoſed, that ſince he was at Epheſus, he had heard Neſtorius ſay, that it was an Impious Aſſertion, to ſay, That a God could be an Infant of two or three Months Old. Acacius alſo, Biſhop of Melitina, averred that he heard one of the Biſhops, which were of Neſtorius's company ſay, That he that ſuffered for us, was a diſtinct Perſon from the Word. After theſe Teſtimonies, they produced many paſſages of the ancient Fathers, and ſeveral pieces of Neſtorius's Writings. * Cite.

The Councils.

Writings. They also read the Letter of Capreolus Bishop of Carthage, brought by Bessulas his Deacon; wherein he tells the Council, that the state of the African Church was such, that he could not call a Synod to choose Deputies for the Council; and that they were so beset with their Enemies, that it was impossible for them to get to it; that the Emperor's Letter came not to them till Easter, and if they had had free passage, they could not have got to the Council so soon; so that he was contented to send his Deacon Bessulas with a Letter of Excuse, but did conjure them not to suffer any Novelty to creep into the Church, and to confirm the ancient Doctrine, and the Catholick Faith.

The Council judging Nestorius sufficiently convicted by these Records, which they had read, pronounced Sentence against him in these words: 'The 'most Impious Heretick Nestorius refusing to ap- 'pear at our Citation, and not suffering the Holy Bi- 'shops, which we sent to him, to enter into his 'House, we were obliged to examine his Cause; 'and having convicted him of dispersing and teach- 'ing an Impious Doctrine, as hath been proved, as 'well by his Letters, and other Writings, as by the 'Sermons which he hath preached in this Metro- 'polis, which hath been confirmed by sufficient 'Testimonies, we have been forced, according to 'the Letter of St. Cæleſtine Bishop of Rome, to 'pronounce against him this heavy Sentence, which 'we cannot do but with grief; Our Lord Jesus 'Christ, against whom Nestorius hath blaspheme, de- 'clares him by this Synod deprived of his Episcopal 'Dignity, and separated from the Communion of the * 'Episcopal Order.

* Sacerdotal, or Priestly.

So that Nestorius was cited twice in one Day, his Cause examined, his Letters and Writings read and rejected, the Letters and Writings of St. Cyril approved, Witnesses heard, and the Condemnation of Nestorius pronounced by 200 Bishops, or thereabouts, at one Session only. It is true, it lasted a long time, for St. Cyril observes in a Letter, that they met very early in the Morning, and made an end very late by Candle-light.

Sancta Synodus. in Epheso cogta. Nestorio, Novo Jude.

The next day the Sentence pronounced against Nestorius by the Synod was signified to him, by a Letter from the Council. In the Direction of it he is called, Another Judas. As soon as this was done, they wrote in the name of the Synod to the Emperor, and Clergy of Constantinople. St. Cyril wrote also in his own name to the Clergy of Constantinople, and Alexandria, and sent the Emperor the Acts of the Council.

Nestorius was not idle on his part, but wrote a Letter to the Emperor in his own name, and in the name of 16 Bishops, who signed his Letter, that being come to Ephesus, according to the Orders of the Emperor to be present at the Council, he waited for the Bishops, who were to come thither from all parts, and particularly for the Bishop of Antioch, and the Metropolitans of his Dioceſs: as also for the Bishops that were come out of Italy and Sicily. But perceiving that the Ægyptians were very impatient under this delay, believing that they did it out of design, they had offered to come to the Synod, if Count Candidian would cite them to it, but he would not do it, because he had heard that John Bishop of Antioch, and the Eastern Bishops would soon come. Nevertheless the Bishops of Ægypt and Asia, would hold a Council alone, and had filled the City with trouble; that Memnon Bishop of this City had granted them the Great Church for this tumultuous Assembly to meet in, although he had denied them the Licence to go into St. John's church. He desires the Emperor to give Orders, that they be not wronged and abused, and that they celebrate a Lawful Council, not allowing any Monk or Layman, nor any Bishop not summoned to be present at it, but only two of the most Eminent and Learned, chosen out of every Province, or if he did not think it fit, to permit them to return home again safe. Candidian also sent the Emperor a Relation of what had passed, much like the Account Nestorius had given him; He also gave the Council Notice, that he had written to him, and made his Declaration against the Meeting of the Council; and ordered, that they should wait for the arrival of John Bishop of Antioch.

The Councils.

Five days after the Deposition of Nestorius, John Bishop of Antioch, and the other Eastern Bishops arrived. They were but 26, which being joyned with the 10 Bishops which were with Nestorius, made but 36 in all, if we believe St. Cyril's Relation. Nevertheless in the Subscriptions of their Letters we find more than 50 set down by their Names, and the Names of their Cities. The Council sent some Bishops to meet John Bishop of Antioch, and desired him not to communicate with Nestorius, who was deposed. But John Bishop of Antioch was so far from hearkening to them, that as soon as he arrived, he held a Council * in the place of his Abode. Here Candidian declared, that he had done all he could to hinder the Bishops, who were assembled with Cyril and Memnon, from doing any thing before the coming of the Eastern Bishops; that they had required of him, that they might read the Emperor's Letters, saying, they knew not the Emperor's Orders that he had done it against his Will merely to prevent any Sedition, but at his departure he had admonished them to do nothing rashly; but not having regard to his Advice, they had done what they pleased; after they had driven him out of the Council, and refused to hear the Bishops which Nestorius had sent to them. He then read the Emperor's Letter, and when that was done, John Bishop of Antioch demanded, if he had done any thing more. He said, that they had deposed Nestorius, and had published and fastened up his Deposition. John Bishop of Antioch went on, and asked him, If it were done regularly; if Nestorius were present, and convicted; or whether he was condemned without being heard. Candidian answered, that it was all transacted without Examination, and contrary to the Rules. Candidian having given this Testimony, he went out. The Bishops accused Memnon of shutting up the Churches against them, and St. Cyril of reviving the Error of Arius and Nestorius in his twelve Chapters. Upon this Accusation they pronounce the Sentence of Deposition against St. Cyril and Memnon, and excommunicated all those who had Communion with them, till they should confess the Faith of the Council of Nice without adding any thing to it; pronouncing Anathema against St. Cyril's Chapters, and obeying the Emperor's Orders, who commanded them to examine this Question without tumult and noise. This Sentence was signified to the Bishops, against whom it was given; and because they minded it not, they protested against Cyril and Memnon, because they still held a Council after they were deposed, and contrary to the prohibition of Candidian. These Bishops immediately sent the Emperor word by Writing what they had done. There were two remarkable Circumstances in this Letter. The first, that St. Cyril had written to John Bishop of Antioch two days before the beginning of the Synod, that he would stay till he came. The second, that they could not get thither sooner, because of the length and tiresomness of the Voyage, which they were forced to make by Land. They wrote also to the Clergy, Senate, and People of Constantinople, to the Empresses and to the People of Hierapolis.

* In his Inn.

The Relation of Candidian being received at Constantinople first, Theodosius ordered, that all that had been done by St. Cyril's Synod, should be looked upon as Null und Void, and that the whole Council should proceed to a new Judgment; forbidding the Bishops to go from Ephesus, till he had sent some of his Officers to the Synod to know how things had passed there. This is the Subject of the Emperor's Letter, dated June 19, brought to Ephesus by Palladius. This was signified to the Bishops of both sides. St. Cyril, and the Bishops of his Party answered, that Candidian had not given a true Relation of things to the Emperor, and deſired him to ſend for him to Conſtantinople with five Biſhops of the Council, that he might be informed of the truth of all their Proceedings. This Letter was not ſubſcribed by all the Biſhops, becauſe Palladius, who was to carry it, was very urgent to be gone.

John Biſhop of Antioch, and the Biſhops of his Party wrote alſo by this Palladius to the Emperor; and having related all that had paſſed a ſecond time, they prayed him, that only two Biſhops out of every Province ſhould be allowed to be at the Synod with their Metropolitan. They alſo complained, that the Church of St. John had been ſhut againſt them; inſomuch that they were forced to pray abroad, and had been abuſed in their return. Laſtly, they humbly implore the Emperor to remove Cyril and Memnon, the Heads of this Perſecution from Epheſus. A little after they ſent Count Irenæus, to whom they gave another Relation againſt St. Cyril, concerning the Violence, which they pretend he had done them, by keeping them out of St. Paul's Church, by throwing of Stones at them. They alſo gave him Letters to the Governor of Conſtantinople and to the Officers of the Emperor, that they would maintain their Cauſe. Neſtorius wrote alſo in his own Name to an Eunuch of the Emperor, that he did not refuſe to call the Virgin Mary, The Mother of God, provided that they would condemn the Error of Apollinaris which is maintained by St. Cyril.

July 10. Philip and Arcadius Legates of the Church
Act. II. of Rome, arrived at Epheſus, and joyning themſelves with St. Cyril and his Synod, according to their Inſtructions, by which they were ordered to act in conjunction with him, they held a Seſſion the ſame Day, in which they read St. Cæleſtine's Letter, dated May 8. firſt in Latin, and after in Greek, which ſhews us, 'twas the Cuſtom to read the Letters of the Holy See in the Tongue wherein they were written. The Subſtance of it was this, that the Holy Spirit is preſent in Synods, and all Biſhops being the Apoſtles Succeſſors are obliged to maintain and defend the Doctrine, which they have received from them, and to imitate the Zeal and Vigilance of their Predeceſſors; that they ought to have the ſame Spirit as they have but one Faith; that the Queſtion in hand obliges them to arm themſelves with a freſh Zeal, becauſe the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt is endangered by it; that he hopes, that he, who hath united the Synagogue, and the Church, will re-unite the Minds of Chriſtians, reſtore the Church's Peace, and make the Truth and ancient Faith to triumph; He exhorts them to continue in that Love ſo much commended by St. John, whoſe Reliques they have among them; that they ought to pray to God with one Heart and Voice, that he would direct them by the Light of his Holy Spirit, and give them Courage to defend the Word of God zealouſly, and procure the Peace of the Church. Laſtly, he tells them, that he ſent them the Biſhops Arcadius and Projectus and Philip a Prieſt, to be preſent at all the tranſactions of the Council, and put in execution what he had already ordained. After this Letter was read, the Legates of St. Cæleſtine demanded, that they would communicate to them the Acts of what was already done, which was granted them. We find at the end of this Act two other Letters of St. Cæleſtine's, the one of which is directed to Theodoſius, and the other to St. Cyril. He exhorts the former to protect the ancient Faith, and he anſwers to the latter who had conſulted him, whether he might ſtill receive Neſtorius, the time which he had fixed for his Retractation, being paſſed; He anſwers him, I ſay, that we muſt always receive a Sinner, whenſoever he returns, and that we muſt endeavour to appeaſe the troubles raiſed in the Church. He tells him likewiſe that he earneſtly deſired, that Neſtorius might repent, and that he may be again received. Theſe two Letters bear date, the one May 7. and the other May 15.

The next day they met, to read over again the Acts of the firſt Seſſion of the Council to Cæleſtine's Legates. When they heard them, they approved them, gave their Judgment againſt Neſtorius, and ſubſcribed his Condemnation. When this was done, they framed a Letter to the Emperor, wherein they tell him, that the Legates of the Biſhop of Rome had aſſured them, that all the Weſtern Churches agreed with them in their Doctrine, and had condemned with them the Doctrine and Perſon of Neſtorius. So that this Matter being thus ended as the Emperor deſired it for the benefit of the Church, and of the Faith, they deſired him to give them leave to withdraw, to ſecure them from the Perſecution they were threatned with, and ſuffer them to ordain a Biſhop at Conſtantinople in the room of Neſtorius. They wrote at the ſame time to the Clergy and People of Conſtantinople, to exhort them to put ſome Perſon into the See of Conſtantinople in the place of Neſtorius, lately depoſed by the Council for his impious Doctrine.

The Councils. Act. III.

The Judgment of Neſtorius being thus finiſhed, Cyril and Memnon caſt about them how they might Act. IV. provide againſt the Sentence of Depoſition pronounced againſt them by the Eaſtern Biſhops. The Council therefore being aſſembled the fourth time, on July 16th. Cyril and Memnon preſented a Petition againſt John Biſhop of Antioch, wherein they ſay, That the Council being aſſembled in the City of Epheſus to confirm the Faith of the Church, and to condemn the Hereſie lately invented by Neſtorius, had acted regularly, and in the uſual Forms; that they had cited Neſtorius three times to render a Reaſon of his Doctrine; but this Heretick refuſing to appear, the Council had attentively examined his Writings, and had condemned him according to the Rules of the Church-Diſcipline; that after this Judgment given, and an Account of it ſent to the Emperor, John Biſhop of Antioch had come to Epheſus, where he aſſembled himſelf with the Biſhops of Neſtorius's Opinion, of whom ſome were depoſed, and others were Biſhops only in Name, having no See, and that in this Aſſembly, which had no Authority to judge any Man, he deliberately pronounced a Sentence of Depoſition againſt them, although he could not do it, the Biſhop, whom he principally pretended to judge, being in a See ſuperior to his own. But yet although he might have undertaken this Judgment, yet he ought to have followed the Canons and Rules of the Church, to have admoniſhed them, and cited them before the Council; but contemning all theſe Rules, he had raſhly and inconſiderately, pronounced a Sentence of Depoſition againſt them, immediately after his arrival, without letting them know for what reaſon he condemned them; that it was a matter of conſequence not to ſuffer the Laws of the Church to be deſpiſed; that one Biſhop dared to do ſuch things to another, who ought to have the Precedence; that he would not dare to attempt the like againſt the meaneſt Perſon of the Clergy; theſe Conſiderations forced them to deſire the Council to ſummon John and his Aſſociates, to give an Account of their behaviour before the Synod. Heſychius Juvenal's Deacon read this Petition, and Juvenal preſided upon this Occaſion, becauſe St. Cyril taking upon him the Perſon of an Accuſer, could not preſide in it, nor his Notary give his Opinion in it.

The Synod having reſpect to the Demand of St. Cyril and Memnon, ſent twice ſome Biſhops to John Biſhop of Antioch, and the Biſhops of his Party, but they were not ſuffered to enter; and the only Anſwer which was made them, was, that they would not have any thing to do with Perſons which they had excommunicated. Then the Council pronounced, that all that had been done againſt Cyril and Memnon, was null, and ordered, that John Biſhop of Antioch ſhould be cited a third time, and if he did not appear, he ſhould be condemned.

The ſame Day John cauſed an Abuſive Libel to be faſtned in a publick Place, not only againſt Cyril and and Memnon, but also against all the Bishops of their Council, declaring Cyril and Memnon deposed for Heresie, and the other Bishops Excommunicate for favouring them, till they should forsake them, and re-unite themselves with the Eastern Bishops.

Act V.

The next Day the Council being assembled again, St. Cyril made his Report concerning the Libel of John Bishop of Antioch, and declared that he condemned Arius, Apollinaris, and the other Hereticks, as well as Nestorius, and the Followers of Pelagius and Cælestius. Whereupon he required that John Bishop of Antioch should be cited the third time. And they sent three Bishops and a Notary to him. John Bishop of Antioch received them by his Arch-deacon, who would have given them a Paper as from the Council, but they declared that they came not to receive any Paper, but to cite John Bishop of Antioch. This Arch-deacon went to tell his Bishop so, and being returned, presented them again with his Paper; and because they would not receive it, he said to them, Let no body come from you, and we will send no body from our side; we have sent our Resolutions to the Emperor, and we wait his Orders, to know what we shall do. The Bishops insisting upon it, and desiring him to hear what the Synod had given them in Charge to say, He answered, You have refused to receive the Paper which I have tendered to you, and I will not hear the Orders of your Synod. This being said, he withdrew himself. The Bishops told Asphalius and Alexander the Priest the Reason of their coming, and then returned to give the Synod a Relation of the whole Matter, who declared John Bishop of Antioch, and the 36 Bishops his Adherents to be separated from the Communion of the Church, and then gave the Emperor an Account of what they had done, praying him to confirm it by his Authority, and consent to all that they had done. They also wrote a Synodical Letter to St. Cælestine, in which they relate all that had passed at Ephesus; and tell him, that they had read and approved his Synodical Decrees against the Pelagians and Cælestians in the Council. He sent him also a Copy of the Acts of the Council. This Act was concluded with a Sermon preached by St. Cyril at Ephesus, against John Bishop of Antioch.

The Eastern Bishops on their side wrote to the Emperor, that Cyril and Memnon having been deposed by their Synod, could not be absolved by Bishops excommunicated; and they prayed the Emperor to send for them to Constantinople, or at least to Nicomedia, and not to permit any Metropolitan to bring more than two Bishops of his Province, because a great Multitude is only fit to cause Disturbance; that their Adversaries had brought with them a great number of Bishops, contrary to the Intentions and Orders of the Emperor; that as for themselves they had obeyed them exactly, by bringing only three Bishops out of each Province, and had sent no Bishop to Court, as their Adversaries had done, but contented themselves with writing to him, because they would not disobey his Orders. They sent this Letter by Count Irenæus.

Act VI.

The 6th Session of the Council was held July 22. Because the Eastern Bishops accused the Bishops of the Council of introducing another Creed, besides that of the Council of Nice; they read it in this Session, declared their Approbation of it in general, and owned that it contained a Sound and Orthodox Doctrine. But they added, that several Persons, who pretended to acknowledge it, putting false Interpretations upon it, they had been forced to produce the Testimonies of the Holy Fathers, to discover the true Meaning of it. Then they read over again the Testimonies of the Fathers, which they had quoted already at the Condemnation of Nestorius. This done, that they might fasten the Reproach which was laid upon them, upon their Adversaries themselves, they caused Charisius a Priest, and a Steward of the Church of Philadelphia, to present a Petition against one James a Priest, a Friend of Nestorius, accusing him for making the Quartodecimans, who returned to the Communion of the Church, to sign a Confession of Faith different from the Nicene Creed, and full of Heresie. He alledged that Form of Faith, which M. Mercator attributes to Theodorus of Mopsuesta, although there be not the least word spoken of it in that Session, that, among other things, it maintains, That the Holy Spirit hath not derived his Subsistence from the Son, that we adore the Son of Man in Jesus Christ, because of its inseparable union with the Word; that there is but one Son, which is the Word, to whom the Manhood being inseparably joyned, partakes of his Dignity, and is called God, and Lord after a particular manner. This Creed, and the Names of those that signed it being read, the Council made this famous Declaration: 'That it is 'not allowable to any Person whatsoever, to alledge, 'write, or make a different Creed from that which 'was made by the holy Fathers assembled at Nice; 'and that all those, who are so audacious as to make, 'or alledge, or offer any other to be signed by such 'as turn themselves, or are converted to the Church, 'whether they be Jews, Pagans, or Hereticks, if 'they be Bishops or Clergymen, they shall be de-'graded from their Dignity; and if they are Lay-'men, they shall be accursed. Then they read the Extracts of Nestorius, and Peter the Chief Notary observed, that he owned, that he was the first that had spoken in that manner. This Act concluded with a Sermon of St. Cyril.

The Councils.

The Council having nothing more to regulate concerning Doctrine, in the 7th Action, which was held July ult. (It is in the Acts Pridie Calendarum Sept. but it ought to be read Pridie Calend. Aug. for this day was past before Count John arrived, and St. Cyril was seized) they discussed matters of Discipline. Rheginus, Zeno, and Evagrius Bishops of Cyprus presented a Petition to the Council against the Bishops of Antioch, complaining that the Bishops of Antioch endeavoured to make the Bishops of the Isle of Cyprus subject to their Jurisdiction, and that the Bishop of Constantia, Metropolitan of Cyprus, being lately dead, the Bishop of Antioch had obtain'd Letters from Dionysius the Prefect, directed to Theodorus Governor of the Isle, prohibiting them from ordaining a Bishop in that City without the Permission of the Council of Ephesus. These two Letters were read, and the Bishops of Cyprus having shewn, that it was the design of John Bishop of Antioch, to ordain the Bishop of Constantia, they asked them if it were the Custom; and being answered, that it was never practised, the Synod ordered, that according to the Canons of the Council of Nice, the Bishops of Cyprus should enjoy their ancient Rights, and ordain the Bishop of Constantia, according to their ancient Custom. On the Occasion of this business they made this general Rule, 'That the ancient Custom should be observed in all 'the Provinces, and that no Bishop should attempt 'to bring under his Jurisdiction a Province which 'hath not heretofore been subject to him, nor his 'Predecessors, and that if any one hath endeavoured 'it, or hath kept any Province by Force, he shall 'be forced to resign it, and restore it to him to whom 'it belongs, that the Canons be not violated, and 'Haughtiness of Worldly Power may not creep in-'to the Church, under the pretence of the Priest-'hood, and so we lose the Liberty, which Jesus 'Christ hath purchased for us by his Blood; he who 'is the Saviour of all Men.

Act VII.

In this Act they also made six Canons, which contain nothing extraordinary concerning Discipline. In them they order only, that the Bishops which are, or shall be joyned to Nestorius, shall be deposed. They decree the same Punishment against those that embrace the Doctrine of Nestorius or Cælestius, or that communicate with Persons excommunicated or Deposed, or who shall contemn or abuse that which is done by the Synod. On the other side, they restored them who have been Excommunicated or Deposed by Nestorius: And they enjoyned all the Clergy, not to obey thoſe Biſhops who have or ſhall embrace the Neſtorian Party.

The Synod alſo in this Act granted a Letter in favour of Euſtatius, who having been ordained Metropolitan of Pamphylia; and finding himſelf oppreſſed with Troubles, was brought by ſome cunning Intrigue to give a Writing, wherein he renounced it. The Council ordered, that altho' Theodorus had been ordained in his place, yet he ſhould enjoy the Name and Dignity of a Biſhop. Nevertheleſs with this Charge, that he ſhould not ordain, nor adminiſter Sacraments by his own Authority in any Church.

In the ſame Act they confirmed the Synodical Decree of Siſinnius, againſt the Meſſalians or Euchitæ, and ordain'd, that they who would not ſubſcribe the Form of the Faith compoſed by this Synod, ſhould be excommunicated or depoſed. They alſo defend their Book, concerning an Aſcetick or Monaſtick Life.

Laſtly, Euprepius of Byza, and Arcadiople, and Cyril Biſhop of Cele, deſired them to preſerve the ancient Cuſtom of the Province of Europe, in which one Biſhop had ſeveral Cities in his Dioceſs. The Council ordain'd, that there ſhould be no Innovations in this Caſe, but the Churches ſhould ſtill be governed as they were heretofore.

While theſe things were tranſacting at Epheſus, it was ſtrongly debated at Conſtantinople, what they ſhould do, about what had paſſed on both ſides there. The Lot of all was, as I may ſay, in the Emperor's hands, and the Succeſs of the Council depended upon the Reſolutions taken at Court. The Council ſent three Biſhops to him, the Eaſtern Biſhops contented themſelves to ſend Count Irenæus only. He arrived there but three days after the Deputies of the Council, who had prepared their Minds to favour them. But when Irenæus was come, he appeared before the Emperor in the preſence of the Deputies of the Council, and did ſo much that he had almoſt perſuaded the Emperor to think, that the Synod held by St. Cyril ought not to be accounted a lawful Council; ſo that he had almoſt confirmed the Decrees of the Eaſtern Biſhops, and baniſhed St. Cyril. But John, the Emperor's Phyſician, and a Friend of St. Cyril being come in, quite changed the ſtate of things by engaging the greateſt part of the Miniſters, ſome of whom were of an Opinion, that what was done on both ſides, was lawful; others thought, that it was neceſſary to declare all null, and to ſend for ſome Biſhops, who were unconcerned, to examine the Matters of Faith, and all that paſſed at Epheſus. In this difficulty Theodoſius took their part who approved of the Depoſition of Neſtorius, as alſo of St. Cyril and Memnon; upon the account of factious combining, and conſpiring one againſt another; being perſuaded, that as to what concerned the Faith, they had all Orthodox Sentiments, and all agreed in the Doctrine of the Nicene Council. In this he followed the Judgment of Acacius of Beræa, who wrote it to the Synod. The Emperor being thus determined, he wrote to the Biſhops of the Council, and ſent Count John to put this Order in Execution; and to re-unite all the Biſhops in one Council, having removed Neſtorius, Cyril, and Memnon.

John was no ſooner come to Epheſus, but he commanded the Biſhops of both Parties to come to him at his Inn. John Biſhop of Antioch, and Neſtorius came thither, accompanied with the Biſhops of his Party, and St. Cyril with his. There was none but Memnon who was miſſing. Immediately there aroſe a conteſt among them. The Ægyptian Biſhops maintain'd that Neſtorius ought not to be preſent at the reading of the Emperor's Letter, and that St. Cyril ought; but John Biſhop of Antioch, and his Party held the contrary. This Diſpute having continued a long time, Count John compelled Neſtorius and St. Cyril to withdraw: And then he read the Emperor's Letter to the other Biſhops; and told them, that it was the Emperor's Will, that Neſtorius, Cyril, and Memnon ſhould be depoſed. John Biſhop of Antioch's Party conſented to it, but the others maintained, that St. Cyril and Memnon ought not to be looked upon as depoſed. Count John to prevent the trouble that was likely to enſue, committed Neſtorius to the Cuſtody of Count Candidian, and St. Cyril to Count James's, and ſent Memnon word of his Sentence of Depoſition; and having ſent for him, alſo put him in Cuſtody to Count James, and then gave the Emperor an Account of what he had done; telling him, that the Minds of the Biſhops ſeemed ſo much exaſperated one againſt another, that he could find no means to reconcile them.

The Eaſtern Biſhops gave Count John a Letter to ſend to the Emperor. In it they deſired, that he would condemn St. Cyril's 12 Chapters; and that he would be contented to have the Nicene Creed without any Additions ſigned by them. They wrote alſo to Acacius, and ſent a Synodical Letter to the Clergy and People of Antioch, wherein they bragged that it was reported, that all they had done was confirmed by the Emperor's Authority. Theſe Letters are in Lupus's Collection, Chap. 17, 18, and 19.

The Biſhops of the Council on their part wrote alſo to the Emperor, to complain of his Sentence, and to aſſure him, that they wondered at his Religion, who was perſuaded that St. Cyril and Memnon had been juſtly condemned. They told him at the ſame time, that they would not communicate with the Eaſtern Biſhops, unleſs they would condemn Neſtorius, and earneſtly beſought him to releaſe St. Cyril and Memnon; and that he would get Information of the whole Affair from Perſons unſuſpected. They wrote alſo to the Biſhops which were at Conſtantinople, and to the Clergy of that Church, complaining of the ill Uſage they met withall, and that they underwent many Hardſhips by being kept at Epheſus. Wherefore they deſired them to pray the Emperor to free them from that Priſon, and to remove them to Conſtantinople, or ſend them home to their own Churches again. They repreſent the ſad Condition that they were in, in the Memoir, which they ſent to the Abbot Dalmatius. St. Cyril alſo wrote himſelf to the Clergy, and People of Conſtantinople, and to the three Ægyptian Biſhops reſiding there. The Letter of the Council with the Relation was carried by * a Beggar in his † Staff; this was delivered to Dalmatius, who was an Abbot in great reputation for Sanctity, who preſented it to the Emperor, to whom he was well known. He alſo read the Letter of the Council to the People of Conſtantinople, and the People cry'd out Anathema to Neſtorius. The Clergy of Conſtantinople preſented a Petition to the Emperor, in the behalf of St. Cyril and Memnon. Dalmatius, and the Biſhops who were at Conſtantinople, gave the Council an Account of what they had done by Letter. In fine, the Emperor reſolved, and ordered, That they ſhould ſend ſome Biſhops of both ſides to Conſtantinople, that the Affair might be terminated by the cognizance of the Cauſe. There were eight deputed by each ſide. On the Council's ſide, Philip a Prieſt, the Pope's Legate, with theſe Biſhops, Arcadius, who was alſo a Legate for the Holy See, Juvenal Biſhop of Jeruſalem, Flavian Biſhop of Philippi, Firmus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, Theodotus Biſhop of Ancyra, Acacius Biſhop of Melitina, and Euoptius Biſhop of Ptolemais. The Commiſſion which the Council gave them was, That they ſhould demand the Reſtoration of St. Cyril and Memnon; and that they ſhould not re-unite with John, and the Biſhops of his Party, till they had ſubſcribed the Condemnation of Neſtorius, begged Pardon for what they had done, and St. Cyril and Memnon were reſtored. With theſe Inſtructions the Council gave them a Letter to the Emperor, for the Juſtification of St. Cyril and the Council. The Eaſtern Biſhops ſent alſo eight Deputies, viz. John Biſhop of Antioch, John Biſhop of Damaſcus, Himerius Biſhop of Nicomedia, Paul Biſhop of Emeſa, Macarius Biſhop of Laodicea, Apringius Biſhop of Chalcis, and Theodoret Biſhop of Cyprus, †. were left at Liberty to act as they saw convenient, but they recommended it to them to endeavour to make St. Cyril's twelve Chapters should be rejected as Heretical. The Emperor, a little after, gave a second Order, commanding, That Nestorius should withdraw into his Monastery, and that Cyril and Memnon should continue in restraint till their Cause was examined. The Præfect wrote to Nestorius, that he might retire to his Monastery, and that he had taken Order, that he should be furnished with Carriages. Nestorius received this Order with a seeming Joy, and told the Præfect, That he accounted this Order of the Emperor a Kindness, believing nothing more honourable than to be forced to retreat for the defence of Religion; but he pray'd him to take effectual care, that the Emperor do condemn St. Cyril's Chapters by his Publick Letters. This Retirement of Nestorius discovered, that there was no hopes of his Restoration, and that the Cause of the others was yet dubious.

The Deputies arrived at Chalcedon about the end of August, where they received an Order to stay, for they could not come to Constantinople because of the disturbances which the Monks raised. From hence the Deputies of the Eastern Bishops sent a Petition to the Emperor, wherein they desired, that he would not allow any other Confession of Faith, but that of the Council of Nice; and that he would be Judge of the Contests between them, and that they might set down their Reasons on both sides in Writing; Or at least, if he were not at leisure to examine this Affair, that he would dismiss all the Bishops to their Dioceses. They complained also, in this Memoir, of the attempts of Juvenal Bishop of Jerusalem, upon Phœnicia and Arabia. But they said, that they would not have any thing done against him for Peace sake, and for fear of troubling the Church with Personal Contests.

Sept. 4. The Emperor a little after came to his Country-House near Chalcedon, and sent for the Deputies to him, and heard them with an abundance of Patience. The Legates for the Eastern Bishops thought they had an Advantage: And therefore spake against St. Cyril's Chapters, and accused Acacius of having said, that the Godhead was passible; and did so much by their Insinuations, that the Emperor and his Council seemed favourable to them. The Bishops of St. Cyril's Party spake more modestly, and contented themselves to intreat the Emperor to send for St. Cyril, that he may give an Account himself both of his Faith and Conduct. The Emperor propounding it to both sides, to deliver him their Judgment in Writing, the Deputies for the Eastern Bishops said, that they had no other Confession of Faith, but that of the Nicene Council, wherefore they signed that, and presented it to him. They wrote all that had passed to the Bishops of their Party, who in their Answer shew the great Joy that they had for the good Success they were likely to have; telling them, that their Adversaries domineered as before, judged Causes, sent their Sentences of Deposition every where, ordained Bishops, amd disturbed the Churches. They exhort their Deputies to oppose Novel Opinions courageously, and to insist upon the Condemnation of St. Cyril's Chapters. They joyned to this Letter a Petition to the Emperor in which they give him thanks for his favourable reception of their Deputies, and implore him not to suffer them, who are condemned for nothing but rejecting St. Cyril's Heretical Chapters, to remain under Condemnation.

While both Parties waited for the Success of this Affair, Men's minds were much divided at Constantinople; the People heard the Eastern Bishops very favourably; they preached and prayed not in the Churches, for they could not be admitted into them, but in an House; on the contrary, the Clergy and Monks were very much exasperated against them. The Emperor, who had at first favoured them, began by little and little to be disaffected to them. He propounded it to them to receive Cyril and Memnon, but they would not agree to that Proposition; and when they attempted to speak to him of Nestorius, he would not suffer them: His Council was absolutely engaged. Acacius Bishop of Bærea in a Letter printed in Lupus's Collection, Ch. 41, accuses St. Cyril of changing the Judgment of the Court, by bribing the Eunuch Scholasticus with Money; and says, that this Eunuch being Dead, and having left a great deal of Money, the Emperor found an Account of several Sums of Gold received of St. Cyril, which were conveyed to him by Paul, St. Cyril's Nephew. But we have little reason to believe what Acacius Bishop of Berœa says, because he was none of St. Cyril's Friend: But 'tis ever manifest, that the Emperor changed his mind in a very short time, and resolved all on the sudden to have another Bishop Ordained at Constantinople. Wherefore he carried the Deputies of the Council along with him to Constantinople that they might ordain a Bishop. The Deputies of the Eastern Bishops hearing this, sent a Petition to the Emperor, in which having accused their Adversaries of rebelling always against the Orders of the Emperor; they tell him, that being summoned to Chalcedon, they had requested first of all, that they would keep close to the Nicene Creed, and reject the Heretical Chapters of St. Cyril; that being cited a second time, they were ordered to discourse of those things that were in Controversie; and as they prepared themselves for this Dispute, they heard, that his Majesty was returned, and had carried along with him to Constantinople the deposed and excommunicated Bishops, to make them celebrate the Sacraments, and ordain a Bishop, and had left them at Chalcedon, them, who had never attempted any thing but for the defence of the Faith; that they thought themselves obliged to tell him, that if he allowed Hereticks to ordain a Bishop at Constantinople, before their Doctrines were examined, he would infallibly create a Schism, because it will never be endured; that Communion be kept with Hereticks, and that not only the Eastern, but also all the Churches of the Dioceses of Pontus, Asia, Thracia, Illyria, and Italy, will never admit of the Heretical Doctrine of Cyril.

The only Answer that the Emperor gave them, was, that he permitted them, and the other Bishops that were at Ephesus, to return to their Dioceses. As soon as they received this Order, they presented a third Petition, in which they speak with a great deal of Freedom. They complain, that having been cited to confirm the Faith of their Ancestors, they were kept at Chalcedon, and sent back again without doing any thing; that he had favoured them who had ever been rebellious against his Orders, and so had raised these Troubles; that he ought to think, that the Eastern Bishops are his Subjects as well as others; that he ought to protect the Faith, into which he had been baptized, and for which the Martyrs have poured out their Blood; that Faith, with which he had conquered the Barbarians, and which was necessary to subdue Africa; that the Church would be rent in pieces, if he suffered St. Cyril's Doctrine to be settled; that they were obliged to put him in mind, how much he would offend God, if he suffered Persons of Heretical Opinions to perform the Offices of Priests; that they were much troubled to see, that the greatest part of the People, who are now of Orthodox Sentiments, will by this means be infected with Heresie; that their Duty obliged them to admonish him of these things; and to pray him earnestly to put them in order; that if he did it not, they had discharged their Conscience, and do protest against them that this fault may not fall upon them. This Petition did not change the Emperor's mind, insomuch that they were forced to beg of him themselves that he would permit them to withdraw, which they obtain'd. At their departure they wrote to the Eastern Bishops, how things had passed.

The Result of the Emperor's Judgment was, that Nestorius was justly deposed; that St. Cyril and Memnon should keep their Sees; that all the Bishops ſhould return again to their Churches; that neither of them both are Hereticks; and that they ſhould be exhorted to reunite. Theſe are the Contents of the Emperor's Letter to the Biſhops aſſembled at Epheſus, publiſhed by M. Cotelerius, and put by M. Baluzius into his Collection of Councils. The Emperor tells them, that deſiring nothing ſo much as the Peace of the Church, he had done his utmoſt endeavour to hinder their Diſagreement, and to reunite them again; but not being able to bring that about, nor to make them hold a Conference about the Doctrines of Faith, he had ordered, that the Eaſtern Biſhops ſhould return into their own Country, that St. Cyril ſhould go to Alexandria again, and that Memnon ſhould remain at Epheſus; and that as long as he lived, he would not condemn the Eaſtern Biſhops, they not being convicted of any Error, and no Body caring to enter the Liſts with them. That if they deſired Peace, they might write to him; but if they yet ſtood out, they had nothing to do but to return home. Thus the Council of Epheſus ended. St. Cyril returned to Alexandria; and arrived there Octob. 30. Neſtorius retired into the Monaſtery of Euprepius at Antioch; and Octob. 25. Maximian was ordain'd in his place by the Biſhops, which were at Conſtantinople, four Months after the Depoſition of Neſtorius. This Maximian was a Monk, who was thought worthy to be made a Prieſt, and was accounted a very pious Man, though not learned. The Synod which ordain'd him, communicated it to the Biſhops of Epirus, to St. Cæleſtine and St. Cyril. He wrote alſo himſelf to theſe two laſt. The Emperor wrote for him to the Pope. St. Cyril returned an Anſwer to the Synod, and Maximian. Cæleſtine wrote four Letters, the firſt to the Emperor, the ſecond to the Synod that ordained Maximian, the third to Maximian, and the laſt to the Clergy of Conſtantinople. He ſhewed much Joy that Neſtorius was condemned, and ſaid that he earneſtly deſired that Peace might be reſtored. He prays the Emperor chiefly to endeavour it. Theſe Letters are dated March 25. Anno 432.

The Deputies of the Eaſtern Biſhops, who were at Chalcedon, wrote alſo before their departure to Rufus Biſhop of Theſſalonica, to engage Illyria. This Biſhop was not at the Council of Epheſus, but as on the one ſide Flavian Biſhop of Philippi had aſſumed the Title of his Deputy, ſo on the part of the Eaſtern Biſhops Julian Biſhop of Sardica ſate in the Council, and had received a Letter from Rufus, who recommended the defence of the Faith of the Council of Nice to him, and not to ſuffer any Novelty to be introduced. The Deputies of the Eaſtern Biſhops made uſe of this Opportunity to write to Rufus, that they have reſiſted the Doctrine of St. Cyril's Chapters, and would not conſent that any thing ſhould be added to the Nicene Creed: That they had for this Reaſon condemned St. Cyril and Memnon; the one as an Heretick, and the other as a Favourer of Hereſie, and have excommunicated thoſe, who defend them till they ſhould condemn St. Cyril's Chapters, and profeſs the Faith of the Nicene Council: that all the Lenity, which they had uſed, could do no good with them, but ſtill theſe Biſhops continued to maintain theſe Heretical Doctrines, and therefore had made themſelves ſubject to the puniſhment inflicted by the Canons, and particularly by the fourth Canon of the Council of Antioch. Then they accuſed St. Cyril for being of the Judgment of Arius and Apollinaris, and attributing that to the Godhead of Jeſus Chriſt, which is ſaid of his Humane Nature. As for themſelves, they ſay, that they are reſolved to hold to the Doctrine of the Council of Nice, and to follow the Faith of the Holy Fathers: that this is the Judgment not only of the Eaſtern Biſhops, but alſo of the Aſian Churches, and it is not to be doubted but that the Italians will oppoſe the Novelties, which they endeavour to bring in. They alſo accuſe St. Cyril and Memnon for breaking the Canons by Communicating with Excommunicated Perſons, and with the Followers of Pelagius and Cæleſtius, and the Eutychitæ, or Enthuſiaſts. They pray them therefore not to receive St. Cyril and his Adherents to their Communion, nor to receive their Letter.

The Councils.

The end of the Council did not at all conduce to the Peace of the Church, but on the contrary the Minds of Men appeared more diſcontented than ever, and the Eaſtern Biſhops, who had had the worſt of it, ſought to revenge themſelves. In their return they wrote to Theodotus Biſhop of Ancyra againſt the Letters of the Biſhops of the Council. At Tarſus they confirmed what they had done, and depoſed not only St. Cyril and Memnon, but alſo ſix of the Deputies of the Council of Epheſus, viz. Juvenal Biſhop of Jeruſalem, Flavian Biſhop of Philippi, Firmus Biſhop of Cæſarea, Theodotus Biſhop of Ancyra, Acacius Biſhop of Miletene, and Euoptius Biſhop of Ptolemais. Afterward being come into the Eaſt, they met again at Antioch, confirmed what they had done a ſecond time, and from thence wrote to the Emperor, that they held no other Faith than that of the Nicene Council; that they abhorred St. Cyril's Chapters, and earneſtly beſought him to provide, that they be not taught in any of the Churches. Theodoret wrote alſo in his own Name to the People of Conſtantinople, which were well-affected to their Party, to confirm them in the Opinions which he had heretofore taught them, and to prove themſelves innocent from the Errors laid to their charge, by profeſſing that there is but one Chriſt, and by oppoſing St. Cyril's Sentiments, as being the ſame with the Apollinarians. There was in the fartheſt part of the Eaſt, a certain Biſhop, who was of St. Cyril's Judgment: It was Rabulas Biſhop of Edeſſa, whoſe Zeal carried him ſo far, that he not only condemned Neſtorius, but alſo publickly pronounced Anathema againſt Theodorus of Mopſueſta, and all that were not of St. Cyril's Judgment. Being of theſe Principles, he perſecuted thoſe, who would not come over to his Opinion, who fled to the other Biſhops. Andrew Biſhop of Samoſata hereupon conſulted with Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, and ſhewed him, that it was neceſſary to declare himſelf. This was the reaſon that made John Biſhop of Antioch, and ſome other of the Eaſtern Biſhops, to write to the Biſhops of Oſroëne, that they ſhould not communicate with Rabulas, till being ſummoned before them, they had pardoned him upon his making Satisfaction, or he had been puniſhed according to the Rigour of the Laws.

Ibid. c. 43. Ibid. c. 44.

But as the Party of Cyril were ill uſed in the Eaſt, ſo thoſe of the Neſtorian Party, and the Eaſtern Biſhops met with no better uſage in Aſia, Cappadocia and Thracia. Maximian choſen Biſhop of Conſtantinople, who began already to exerciſe his Juriſdiction over the Churches of theſe Dioceſes, would have himſelf acknowledged by all the Biſhops, and deprived them, who would not communicate with him. Firmus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, the Metropolis of Cappadocia Prima, came to Tyana, and ordain'd a Biſhop in the place of Eutherius: but he getting ſome help, forced him, whom Firmus had ordain'd, to renounce his Ordination. They alſo attempted to depoſe Dorotheus Metropolitan of Martianople, and ordain Saturninus in his place. They alſo endeavoured to deprive Helladius Biſhop of Tarſus, becauſe he would not put the Name of Maximian into the Dypticks. Laſtly, all places were full of depoſed and exiled Biſhops, and the Church was in terrible Trouble and Confuſion.

The Emperor Theodoſius being deſirous to remedy theſe Diſorders, which increaſed daily, wrote to John Biſhop of Antioch, that he might put an end to theſe Troubles by ſigning the Condemnation of Neſtorius, and pronouncing Anathema to his Doctrine, and by this means all this Trouble would ceaſe: that St. Cyril, St. Cæleſtine, and the other Biſhops would communicate with him; and that this may be brought to paſs, he commanded him to come to Nitomedia with ſome of his Clergy only, aſſuring him, that St. Cyril had alſo Orders to be there, and that he had told them, that they ſhould not come to Court, till they they were reconciled, and had procured Peace to the Church by their Re-union. He forbids them in the mean while to attempt either to diſpoſeſs, or ordain any Biſhop. The Emperor wrote to St. Simeon Stylites, and Acacius Biſhop of Beræa, that the one ſhould labour to procure the Peace of the Church by his Prayers, and the other by his Care. This Letter was written in the beginning of the Year 432. The Count Ariſtolaus was ſent to execute theſe Orders, and wrote to John Biſhop of Antioch to come to Nicomedia. John ſuſpected that the deſign was to carry him from thence to Conſtantinople, and therefore being unwilling to do any thing without the advice of his Brethren, he wrote to Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, that if it were in his Power to go, or not, it was neceſſary to deliberate together, what they ſhould anſwer; and if he were carried away by force, he ought at leaſt to take his leave: that he was too weak to undertake ſo great a Journey: that he was afraid they would make ſome attempt upon his Life by the way. Then he deſires Alexander to come to the Synod, which was ſhortly to meet at Cyrus, according to the Cuſtom, that they might take Reſolutions together what they ſhould do. He adds, that the Propoſitions which they had brought, were more impious; that St. Cyril's Chapters had ſome appearance at leaſt of Error, but at preſent they demanded no more than to condemn them that taught that there were two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt.

C. 25. Ib. Collect. of Lupus, c. 51. 52.

Ibid. 50.

Ariſtolaus uſed no compulſion to carry John Biſhop of Antioch: but finding him inclinable to Peace, ſuffered him to call a Synod, which was held at Antioch, where they declared that they would remain ſtedfaſt to the Faith of the Council of Nice, which needed no Explication; that they underſtood it in the Senſe, in which St. Athanaſius had explained it in his Letter to Epictetus, and that they rejected the Letters, Chapters, and other Deciſions lately made, as being only fit to raiſe Diſturbances.

Ibid. c. 53. c. 58. c. 62.

They made alſo five other Propoſitions, but this was the principal, and all the Eaſtern Biſhops reſolved for the Peace of the Church to receive St. Cyril to their Communion, if he did approve this Propoſition, provided that they were not obliged to ſubſcribe the Condemnation of Neſtorius. This was the Judgment not only of John Biſhop of Antioch, but alſo of Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, Theodoret, Andrew Biſhop of Samoſata, and other Zealous Defenders of the Neſtorian Party. Acacius Biſhop of Beræa was commiſſioned to make this Propoſition to Ariſtolaus, that he might communicate it to St. Cyril. This Count went immediately to Alexandria, and made this Propoſition to St. Cyril, who would not accept the Propoſition of the Eaſtern Biſhops, but on the contrary in his Letter to Acacius inſiſted upon it, that he not only could never reject that, which had been done at Epheſus againſt the Blaſphemies of Neſtorius, but likewiſe that he could not unite again with the Eaſtern Biſhops, unleſs they would condemn Neſtorius and his Doctrine, and treat him with diſgrace as an Heretick. Nevertheleſs to give the Eaſtern Biſhops ſome Satisfaction, he pronounced Anathema againſt the Errors of Arius and Apollinaris, and declares that he believes that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt is animated with a Rational Soul; that he allows not of any Confuſion, Converſion or Mixture between the two Natures of Jeſus Chriſt; that he confeſſes, that the Godhead is impaſſible, but holds, that Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God, hath ſuffered according to the Fleſh for us. He adds, that his twelve Chapters were only deſigned to oppoſe Neſtorius's Errors; and when the Peace is made, he will eaſily ſatisfie any Objections, which they can form againſt them.

C. 58. 62.

This Letter being delivered to Acacius of Beræa, with another from Ariſtolaus, which was brought by Maximus, ſent on purpoſe from Alexandria about this Affair, Acacius alſo having afterwards received two other Letters from St. Cyril, and one from the Biſhop of Rome, as alſo a ſecond Letter from the Emperor, all which exhorted him to further the Peace of the Church; he ſent to Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, and Theodoret, a Copy of St. Cyril's Letter; and wrote to them at the ſame time, That he thought that they ought to be contented with this Explication, which was very exact, and conformable to their Sentiments, and that he prayed them to approve the Anſwer which John Biſhop of Antioch, and the other Biſhops aſſembled at Antioch gave St. Cyril, and the Conditions of Peace to which they would agree. Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis and Theodoret, were of different Judgments about the Letters of St. Cyril, yet they both agreed that they ought not to conclude a Peace upon this Condition alone. Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis took notice, that the Letter of St. Cyril contained alſo ſome Errors, and maintained that the Word ought to be thought only to have ſuffered according to the Fleſh. Theodoret on the contrary believed it Orthodox, and looked upon it as a tacit Retractation of the Doctrine of the twelve Chapters, although there were ſome terms intricate and obſcure: But he much diſapproved St. Cyril's Conduct in rejecting the Propoſition, which had been offered by the Biſhops of the Council of Antioch, and he thought it impoſſible to make any Peace ſo long as St. Cyril would oblige them to ſign the Condemnation of Neſtorius. He was very willing, that they ſhould condemn thoſe in general, who affirm, that Jeſus Chriſt is a mere Man, who divide Jeſus Chriſt into two Sons, or deny his Godhead; but he could not endure to condemn a Perſon, whom he thought to be of Orthodox Sentiments, at the ſame time, that he approved of ſound Doctrine. Andrew Biſhop of Samoſata, Maximus Biſhop of Anazarbum, Helladius Biſhop of Tarſus, Eutherius Biſhop of Tyana, were of the ſame Judgment with Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis; and although they were averſe from the Propoſition of Peace made by St. Cyril, yet they would not agree to Theodoret's. This is ſeen by the Letters which theſe Biſhops wrote one to another, and to Acacius Biſhop of Beræa, Mediator of the Peace.

The Councils.

C. 57, 58, 59, 60.

c. 60. 61. In Lupus's Collection from c. 54 to c. 74.

John Biſhop of Antioch, who earneſtly deſired a Peace, being troubled to ſee theſe impediments on both ſides, thought, that the beſt way to remove them, was to ſend a Biſhop, being perſuaded, that things would be cleared by a Conference, and that an Accomodation might more eaſily be effected vivâ voce, than by Writing; beſides, by this means the more Zealous would not be obliged to ſubſcribe any thing, and yet would be comprehended in the Peace. Therefore he choſe Paul Biſhop of Emeſa, who had ſubſcribed for Acacius Biſhop of Beræa in their Council of Epheſus, to undergo this Charge. He wrote alſo at the ſame time to Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, that he ought to yield; that the Objections which he made were very ſubtle; that it was not a time to diſpute Philoſophically, but to redreſs the troubles of the Church, and the preſſing dangers with which it was threatned; that Archilaus Biſhop of Euphrateſia was likely to be condemned to bear a great Fine.

c. 77. 138. c. 78.

Alexander, Biſhop of Hierapolis, could not agree to this Propoſition, and took that very ill which John had written to him. Dorotheus Biſhop of Martianople approved of their ſending Paul Biſhop of Emeſa; but he particularly recommended it to them, that they ſhould oblige them to ſubſcribe, That there are two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, without Confuſion or Mixture.

John Biſhop of Antioch gave Paul Biſhop of Emeſa a Letter for St. Cyril, in which he tells him, That his twelve Chapters were the Source and Original of the Diviſion; but his Letter to Acacius had made them clear, and corrected what was amiſs in them; that it needed no further Explication, and that if the Peace were once concluded, they might explain themſelves better. He was pleaſed, that St. Cyril approved of St. Athanaſius's Letter to Epictetus, and ſays, That that alone was ſufficient to diſcover the true Senſe of the Doctrine of the Council of Nice.

Paul Biſhop of Emeſa being come to Alexandria, c. 80.

The Councils.

having had one Conference with St. Cyril about what paſſed at Epheſus, delivered the Letter of John Biſhop of Antioch to him, who was much diſpleaſed with him for it; becauſe it revived the complaints, which were made againſt the twelve Chapters, and reflected upon what was done in the Council of Nice. Nevertheleſs the Emperor was intent upon a Peace, and reſolved to have one at any rate. Paul Biſhop of Emeſa, a ſubtle and prudent Man, excuſed the Letter of John Biſhop of Antioch, and ſaid, That he had no deſign to offend St. Cyril, and that it ought not to be any hindrance to the Union. St. Cyril inſiſted upon the Condemnation of Neſtorius, and Paul Biſhop of Emeſa ſatisfied him by acknowledging that Neſtorius had been juſtly depoſed, and that Maximian was a lawful Biſhop, and giving him a Declaration of it in Writing. Paul Biſhop of Emeſa having ſubſcribed it, requeſted, that he would be contented with his Subſcription, as done in the Name of all the Eaſtern Biſhops. But St. Cyril required, that John alſo ſhould ſubſcribe a certain Writing, which he would ſend him. Paul Biſhop of Emeſa demanded alſo, That the Biſhops depoſed by Maximian ſhould be reſtored, viz. Helladius of Tarſus, Eutherius of Tyana, Himerius of Nicomedia, and Dorotheus of Martianople, but St. Cyril would not give his conſent to it.

c. 85.

Nevertheleſs the common report at Conſtantinople was, That St. Cyril had retracted his Opinions, and done all that the Eaſtern Biſhops required of him; inſomuch that St. Cyril was obliged to relate the whole Tranſaction to his Legates; How he had obliged Paul to ſign the Condemnation of Neſtorius, before he communicated with him, and how he had not ſent a Letter of Communion to John Biſhop of Antioch, but upon condition, that before it be given him he ſhould ſign a Writing, which he did ſend him, containing the Condemnation of Neſtorius.

c. 202, 203.

John Biſhop of Antioch deferring his Anſwer for ſome time, St. Cyril was ſomething troubled, fearing leſt his Deputies ſhould have given his Letter of Communion to John Biſhop of Antioch, before he had ſigned the Condemnation of Neſtorius. Epiphanius the Arch-Deacon, and Coadjutor of St. Cyril, wrote about it to Maximian, and earneſtly intreated him to ſee that their deſign be put in Execution, and to perſuade the Emperor to compel John Biſhop of Antioch to ſubſcribe againſt Neſtorius, and command, that no mention be made of him for the future.

p. 3. Act of the Counc. 30.

John Biſhop of Antioch having received St. Cyril's Letter, returned him an Anſwer, and changing ſomething in the Form of Faith, which St. Cyril had ſent him, ſaid, 'That without adding any thing to the 'Confeſſion of Faith made by the Council of Nice, 'unleſs by way of Explication and Declaration, he 'confeſſed, That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Only 'Son of God, was perfect God and perfect Man, 'having a Body, and a reaſonable Soul, born of his 'Father from all Eternity, according to his God-'head, born of the Virgin in time according to his 'Manhood, conſubſtantial with the Father accor-'ding to the * Divinity; becauſe he hath united the 'two Natures after ſuch a manner, as that they are 'but One Chriſt, One Son, One Lord. And in this 'Senſe of the Union without Mixture it may be 'ſaid, That the Holy Virgin is the Mother of God, 'becauſe the Word was Incarnate, was made Fleſh, 'and was united in the Moment of his Conception 'to the Body, which he took from her. And as to 'the Terms attributed to our Lord in the Goſpels 'and Writings of the Apoſtles; ſome of which, 'Divines make common, as agreeing to the Perſon 'only, and others they apply ſeparately upon the 'account of the diſtinction of the two Natures, and 'apply ſome to the Divine, and others to the Hu-'mane Nature of Jeſus Chriſt.

* N.B.

Having given his Approbation of this Faith, he declares, that for Peace ſake, and to take away all occaſion of Scandal, he did acknowledge that Neſtorius was juſtly depoſed; that he condemned the Novel Expreſſions, which they endeavoured to introduce; that he approved the Ordination of Maximian, and he communicated with all the Orthodox Biſhops.

The Councils.

This Letter being carried to Alexandria, St. Cyril did readily unite himſelf with John Biſhop of Antioch; and to ſatisfie John Biſhop of Antioch, and the Eaſtern Biſhops for his part, he wrote them a Letter, in which having declared how joyful he was at this Re-union, and approved their Confeſſion of Faith; he condemns the Errors they had accuſed him of, and acknowledged, that there is not either Mixture, or Confuſion, or Converſion of the two Natures; that the Nature of the Word is neither diminiſhed, nor become paſſible. He approves of Athanaſius's Opinion, but he obſerves, that there are two Editions, wherein the Letter to Epictetus hath been corrupted. Paul Biſhop of Emeſa, and St. Cyril, being thus agreed in the main, Paul Biſhop of Emeſa made a Sermon Dec. 25. 432. in which having explained his Doctrine about the Incarnation, and confeſſed that he believed the Virgin the Mother of God, he was interrupted by the Acclamations of the People; So that he preached the remaining part on Jan. 1. following, and St. Cyril approved Paul Biſhop of Emeſa's Diſcourſe in a ſhort Sermon.

Act of the Counc. p. 3. c. 31, 32.

John Biſhop of Antioch having received this News with this Letter of St. Cyril, he wrote Circular Letters to the Eaſtern Biſhops; in which he tells them, That St. Cyril had made a plain Confeſſion of the Orthodox Faith, approved the Form of Faith which he had ſent him, and had freed himſelf from the Errors with which he was accuſed, and had removed all Objections againſt him; that by this means, all the Churches were again united in one Communion. He exhorts all the Biſhops to joyn in this Peace, and ſays, That they that ſtand out, will diſcover, that they have acted not through Zeal for the Faith, but through Paſſion. He ſent them with this Letter a Copy of his Letter to St. Cyril, and of St. Cyril's to him. John Biſhop of Antioch wrote alſo particularly to Theodoret, before Paul Biſhop of Emeſa was returned. Laſtly, he ſent a Letter of Communion in his own Name, and in the Name of the Eaſtern Biſhops, to St. Sixtus, St. Cyril, and Maximian, in which he aſſures them, that he approved of the Depoſition of Neſtorius, condemned his impious Doctrine, and conſented to the Ordination of Maximian; and St. Cyril on his part wrote to Maximian, St. Sixtus, and John Biſhop of Antioch. While theſe things paſſed in the Eaſt, St. Sixtus Biſhop of Rome, who ſucceeded St. Cœleſtine, had ordered things in the ſame manner almoſt at Rome, having approved of what the Council had done againſt Neſtorius, yet without coming to any diſagreement with John Biſhop of Antioch, and the Eaſtern Biſhops, and exhorting St. Cyril to endeavour after Peace, and to receive them, if they would approve of the Orthodox Faith.

3. p. Act. of the Counc. c. 27.

Since there were always ſome Perſons, who carried themſelves with Paſſion, or indiſcreet Zeal, this Peace was not generally approved. St. Cyril was accuſed by ſome of being too remiſs; inſomuch, that he was forced to juſtifie himſelf by ſeveral Letters, and to demonſtrate, that the Confeſſion of the Eaſtern Biſhops was Orthodox. This is the Subject of his Letters to Acacius Biſhop of Melitine, to Eulogius, to Donatus, and Maximus, who refuſed to communicate with John, and the other Eaſtern Biſhops.

This Agreement of John Biſhop of Antioch diſpleaſed a great many of his Brethren. Theodoret, who was one of the moſt moderate of that Party, did not at firſt diſapprove the Conditions of the Peace, not knowing, that they exacted the Condemnation of Neſtorius, but he wrote to John Biſhop of Antioch, that he ought not to conclude a Peace, till thoſe who had been deprived were reſtored. He wrote alſo the ſame to Theoſebus, and ſeveral other Biſhops. John Biſhop of Antioch wrote about it to the Emperor, peror, to satisfie him. But Alexander Bishop of Hierapolis, Andrew Bishop of Samosata, Meletius Bishop of Mopsuesta, declared from the beginning, That they disapproved of this Peace, and reproved two things chiefly in it, viz. The Condemnation of Nestorius, and the Approbation of the Term, The Mother of God without any Explication. Theodoret likewise knowing, that he had condemned Nestorius, disallowed the Agreement, and joined with Andrew of Samosata, and Alexander of Hierapolis. He invited them to come to Zeugma to deliberate about what was fit for them to do. Alexander would not go, but answered, That such a Meeting was needless; that 'twas evident, that St. Cyril was more to be blamed than ever; that he required that Nestorius should be peremptorily condemned, but would not condemn the three Chapters. He complains of the proceed- C. 100, ings of John Bishop of Antioch, and accuses him of C. 101. having betrayed his Faith, and condemned an innocent Person. Andrew Bishop of Samosata was more moderate, and advised Alexander to agree, without requiring St. Cyril to condemn his twelve Chapters, since it sufficeth, that he hath made Profession of the Orthodox Faith, and we must use some condescension for the benefit of Peace. But Alexander absolutely refused, and declared, That he would not communicate with St. Cyril, nor with those who join'd him. Andrew Bishop of Samosata, and John Bishop C. 105. of Germanicia had much ado to bring him to any 106. Accommodation, for he told them, he took this Proposition ill, and condemned their Carriage. Maximian Bishop of Anazarbum told them, That he was also very much surprized at their proceedings. Theodoret was willing to come to an Agreement, for he thought St. Cyril's Confession was Orthodox, but he would not give up Nestorius. He wrote his Opinion to Helladius Bishop of Tarsus, and the People of Constantinople. Helladius Bishop of Tarsus, Eutherius C. 110. Bishop of Tyana, and the Bishops of Cilicia met at Anazarbum; there they confirmed the Condemnation of St. Cyril, and excommunicated those who had received him to their Communion, till he should condemn his Chapters, as they had agreed the first C. 111. time they were assembled. After they had taken these 112, 113. Resolutions they wrote to St. Sixtus, that St. Cyril C. 114. hath taught the Heresie of Apollinaris in his twelve Chapters, which was condemned at Rome by Pope Damasus; that he hath condemned Nestorius at Ephesus unjustly, and on the contrary St. Cyril and Memnon were justly deposed; that the Emperor having convened the Bishops of both Parties, their Adversaries would not enter into a Conference with them about the Points of Faith; that they taught Errors, and falsly imposed them upon those that were not of their Judgment; that John Bishop of Antioch had himself condemned St. Cyril's Chapters, but hath since prevaricated by receiving St. Cyril and Memnon to Communion; that he alone hath absolved them from the Anathema pronounced against them by several Bishops; and not content with this, he contemned Nestorius, and all that he hath affertrd, as impious, without marking any particular. They pray the Pope to inform himself of these things, and to assist them; that they would pour out Floods of Tears at his Feet, if the Fear of those Wolves, which are ready to enter into their Flocks, did not constrain them to continue with them, and watch over them.

It was to no purpose for them to think to engage the Pope to them, for knowing the Peace he had approved the Conditions, Sept. 15. 433. and had written about them to St. Cyril, and John Bishop of Antioch.

C. 123. John Bishop of Antioch being angry, because Alexander and some other Bishops of the East and Asia, not only refused to be included in the Peace, but separated themselves from him upon that Account; after he had written to them several times, he implored the help of the Imperial Authority, to force them to submit to his Will. Proclus having been ordain'd Bishop of Constantinople in the room of Maximian, in the beginning of the Year 434, he took that occasion, writing about that Ordination to the Prefect Taurus, to desire him to assist him with his his Authority against the Bishops, who refused to joyn in Communion with him. He sent also to Con- C. 123, stantinople one named Verius, who obtain'd an Edict 124. against them from the Emperor, directed to Domi- C. 140. tian the Questor. John Bishop of Antioch certified C. 126. Alexander in particular of the Emperor's Will, telling him, that he would not allow any of the Bishops to come to Constantinople. The Letter was delivered to Alexander by one of the Emperor's Officers, but he would not receive it; but hearing it read only, he promised to obey the Emperor's Orders. Alexander C. 127. Bishop of Hierapolis, and the Bishops of Euphratesia, whose Metropolitan he was, wrote a Circular Letter to all the Bishops of Syria, the two Cilicia's and of Cappadocia Secunda, in which they complain of John Bishop of Antioch, as well because he hath condemned Nestorius, as because of the troubles he involved them in, and his daily attempts against them. Alexander in signing this Letter, discovers, that it C. 130. was a year since he communicated with him, which shews, that it was written in 434. Helladius Bishop of Tarsus, Metropolitan of the upper Cilicia, and four Bishops of the same Province answered them, That they had a design to call a Synod, but being hindred by the approaching Festival, they comforted them by advising them to have recourse to their Prayers. Meletius Bishop of Mopsuesta, and the Bi- C. 131. shops of the Lower Cilicia comforted them also by a Letter, and exhorted them to remain stedfast. But Alexander Bishop of Apamæa wrote to Alexander Bi- C. 132. shop of Hierapolis, that he desired to speak with him, certainly that he might persuade him to the Peace; but not being able to come to Hierapolis by reason of the Feast, he prayed him to come to some Monastery half way to meet him. All these Writings would not keep him from persecuting the Bishops, who would not communicate with John Bishop of Antioch. Theodoret complains in a Letter written to the Go- C. 133. vernor of his Country, That they had stirred up Tumults in his Dioceses, that they had thrust out Abibus Bishop of Dolechia, and had ordained in his place a Priest called Athanasius, who had been heretofore convicted of a wicked Life; that they had also ordained in another Church one named Marinian known to be a debauched Man, and that this Ordination had been made contrary to the Canons, without the Authority of the Metropolitan, by strange Bishops. That they had hindred Athanasius from entring the Church of Dolechia, and made him promise upon Oath, that he would not accept of it, but that he had not long after possessed himself of it, without any regard had to his Oaths.

Abibus being thus deprived, presented a Petition C. 135. to Alexander Bishop of Hierapolis, and to Theodorus, a Bishop of his Province, wherein he complains that he had been driven out of his See by Force, and declared, That he had never voluntarily quitted his Bishoprick, as they had divulged. These Bishops wrote to the Empresses against those violences, which John Bishop of Antioch used against those that would not be of his Judgment. They complain, that he had ordain'd two Bishops in their Province contrary to the Canons; and that he had put one into a Church which was in the Dioceses of Hierapolis. They implore these Princes to obtain of the Emperor to forbid these Ordinations contrary to the Rules, and allow the Bishops in their Province to celebrate them according to their Custom, and to leave the Church of St. Sergius to depend upon the Bishoprick of Hierapolis.

Nevertheless, there came a second Order from the C. 142, to Court to Titus a Count and Imperial Vicar, and sent 146. in the Emperor's Name by Count Dionysius, Master of the Horse, who enjoyned him to bid Helladius Bishop of Tarsus, Maximian Bishop of Anazarbum, Alexander Bishop of Hierapolis, and Theodoret, to return to the Communion of John Biſhop of Antioch, upon the Penalty of being immediately deprived of their Churches. Helladius wrote about it to Melitius Biſhop of Mopſueſta, and deſired to know what he ſhould do; Melitius anſwered him, That he ought to remain ſtedfaſt. Theodoret alſo wrote about it to Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, and tells him, That as for himſelf, he was not afraid of his Menaces, and that he was willing to retire; but his Monks had much diſturbed him, by repreſenting it to him as his Duty not to be againſt the Peace, and that they had propoſed it to him to go to Gindarus, where they would procure John Biſhop of Antioch to come that they might diſcourſe of an Agrement; that he had yielded to this Propoſition, but had refuſed to go to Antioch.

Alexander anſwered him, That he was reſolved never to communicate with Cyril: That what had been commanded ſince from Conſtantinople, confirmed him in that Reſolution: That though all the Dead ſhould riſe to perſuade him the contrary, he would do nothing: That he was ready to leave his Biſhoprick, and had already done it, had not he feared he ſhould paſs for a Deſerter, and a Coward for forſaking his Flock. Theodoret anſwered, That he ſeemed to be acted with too much paſſion; that he ought to condeſcend ſo far as he might ſafely without approving any thing that is not true. That he ought to examine the Synodical Letter of John Biſhop of Antioch, and St. Cyril; and if he found it Orthodox, he might communicate with St. Cyril, neverthleſs not approving what had been done at Epheſus; that he had heard, that he brought this Propoſition out of the Eaſt; that Proclus Biſhop of Conſtantinople was of ſound Principles; that Helladius and Eutherius had told him ſo: that he could wiſh, that they could meet with John Biſhop of Antioch at ſome diſtance from Antioch, on condition, that thoſe whom he hath unduly ordained, ſhould be excluded; that he was troubled that John Biſhop of Antioch having in his Letter made Confeſſion of the Orthodox Faith, had condemned Neſtorius, who had no other Opinions than thoſe which John did explain; that that which comforted him, was, That he had not abſolutely condemned his Doctrine, but particularly all that he had ſaid, or written againſt the Doctrine of the Apoſtles.

Alexander replied, That he did not ſeparate from John Biſhop of Antioch upon the account of the Ordinations, which that Patriarch had unjuſtly made, but becauſe he hath betrayed his Faith, and communicated with an Heretick: that he was reſolved not to communicate with any of thoſe, who held Communion with St. Cyril, although they ſhould condemn his Chapters. And to ſhew to what an height the Biſhop of Conſtantinople had driven things, he ſent him the beginning of his Synodical Letter, where he ſpeaks of the Seditions which ſprung from the corrupt Seeds of Neſtorius's Doctrine.

Theodoret did not yield to this Council, but on the contrary, he thought himſelf obliged to admoniſh his Metropolitan Alexander friendly, that it was neceſſary to conſider upon a Peace; that he ſaw the Churches would certainly be ruined; that their Flocks would become a Prey to Wolves; that he was afraid that they muſt give an Account to God for being backward to it; that by comparing the Advantage of Peace with the Diſadvantages that might redound to the Church, he found it would loſe more by holding out, than by a ſmall Compliance.

But Alexander, who was never to be wrought upon, gave him an angry Anſwer, That he would not have him write any more to him about it. And for an Anſwer to Theodoret's Maxim, he told him, that the only way to compare the Benefit and Damage that might be done, is to chuſe the part that Truth is on: that Deprivation, Baniſhment, Death, and diſgraceful Revilings of Men, are nothing to eternal Torments: that he did not wonder that Theodoret, inclined to a Peace, being perſuaded that St. Cyril was Orthodox; but as for him, who thought him an Heretick, he could not communicate with him. Whereupon he cites the Examples of Meletius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, Euſebius Biſhop of Samoſata, of Barſus, and of many other Biſhops, who have been depoſed becauſe they would not communicate with Hereticks. He ſent him a Letter from Parthenius a Prieſt, who aſſured him, that Neſtorius's Adverſaries had not at all altered their Mind.

The Councils.

Theodoret ſeeing that there was no way to change the Reſolution of his Metropolitan, conſulted his own Affairs alone; and going to Antioch, entred into Communion with John, but without any Subſcription, or Approbation of the Condemnation of Neſtorius, to whom he wrote a Letter to excuſe himſelf, as alſo to Helladius Biſhop of Tarſus. The Biſhops of Cilicia Secunda followed his Example, and wrote a Synodical Letter to John Biſhop of Antioch, in which they acknowledged, that his Letter to St. Cyril was Orthodox; that they had ſeparated themſelves from him out of a Suſpicion that St. Cyril's Chapters were Heretical, but their Fear was taken away by that Expoſition of Faith. The Biſhops of Cilicia Prima and Iſauna yielded alſo, but they could never alter the inflexible Reſolution of Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis. Theodoret himſelf wrote again to him, and to his Friends, to perſuade him, but he anſwered his Letters with Anger, and ſharp Reflections, ſhewing always an unconquerable Reſolution and Obſtinacy. Meletius Biſhop of Mopſueſta was the only Man of the Cilician Biſhops that imitated him. John Biſhop of Antioch depoſed him, and ordained in his Place Chromatius, and preſented a Petition to the Emperor to perſuade him to remove him from his See.

But they behaved themſelves better towards Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis. Theodoret having done what he could to bring him over, even by deſiring Neſtorius to write to him, interceded for him to John Biſhop of Antioch, and deſired him to let him alone, ſhewing him, that it would be of no ill Conſequence, nor prejudice his Cauſe, becauſe he would be quiet, whereas if he provoked him, 'twould cauſe more trouble. But John Biſhop of Antioch, who was reſolved to make all the Eaſtern Biſhops ſubject to him, wrote to Alexander by Count Titus, and Dionyſius Maſter of the Horſe, That they had born patiently hitherto in reſpect to him; but if he did ſtill continue in his Reſolution not to communicate with John of Antioch, they could not wait any longer, nor diſſemble. He anſwered with his ordinary ſtiffneſs, That he could not communicate with a Biſhop who had received Hereticks to his Communion, and that he was willing to go without any noiſe or ſtir whither they pleaſed. After this, Titus gave Orders to Libianus Judge of Euphrateſia to expel Alexander, if he ſtill remain'd in his Reſolution, and to put in his place ſuch a Perſon as the Synod of Biſhops ſhould ordain. This Order being made known to Alexander, he retreated, and Libianus telling Titus, that he had executed his Orders, repreſents to him, and John Biſhop of Antioch, the Affliction that the Church of Hierapolis was in, having loſt their Biſhop, and prayed them to have ſome Regard to it.

John Biſhop of Antioch wrote hereupon to the Clergy, and People of Hierapolis, That he had uſed all manner of ways to convert their Biſhop Alexander; That he had prayed, and ſollicited him ſeveral times not to hinder the Peace by his obſtinate Refuſal; And that he was yet willing to receive him, if he would comply, and enter into Communion with him. Laſtly, they thruſt out, and baniſhed all the Biſhops, which refuſed to communicate with John of Antioch. Irenæus hath given us a Catalogue of them, after he hath related the Order, which was given againſt him, and againſt another called Photius, Adherents of Neſtorius: Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, baniſhed to Phamoſis in Egypt, where there are Mines: Abibus Biſhop of Dolochia, who was one of the firſt that was driven out of his Dioceſs, and another ordain'd in his place by John Biſhop of Antioch: Dorotheus Biſhop of Martianople Metropolitan of Moſia, who was ſent to Cæſarea in Cappadocia: Volumius and Eudoxius, Biſhops of the Province of Moſia, ſubject to the Metropolis of Dorotheus who withdrew themſelves voluntarily from their Churches: Meletius Biſhop of Mopſueſta, Biſhop of Cilicia Secunda, baniſhed to Melitina, litina, a City of Armenia, where Acacius Bishop of that City made him suffer much: Zenobius Bishop of Zaphyria in Cilicia Prima, who left his Church in the same manner, and was afterwards banish'd to Tiberias, from which he was also driven: Anastasius Bishop of Tenedos, Pausianus Bishop of Hypate, Basil Metropolitan of Larissa in Thessalia, Julian Bishop of Sardica, who retreated themselves, and suffered much: Theosebus Bishop of Chios, who died in his own Church, and would never communicate with those who had received St. Cyril: Acilinus Bishop of Barbalissa, who was expell'd from his Bishoprick for refusing to communicate with John, but he was after re-united to him without the condemning of Nestorius: Maximinus Bishop of Demetrias in Thessaly, who separated himself immediately after the Condemnation of Nestorius. Thus ended the long and boisterous Contest between the eastern Bishops, which lasted two Years compleat after the Peace made between the B. of Antioch and St. Cyril. Lastly, Nestorius, who was the Author and Subject of all these Troubles, was himself last of all sacrific'd to it, being remov'd from his Monastery, and banish'd to Oasis by the Emperor's Edict publish'd in 435, and by another Edict in August in the same Year: His Books were condemned to be burnt, and all Persons forbid to read them.

C. 192. Peace seemed by this Means to be restored to the Church, all the Bishops being of the same Communion, but there still remained some Seeds of Division in Mens Minds. The eastern Bishops had a secret Grudge against the Egyptian, and the Egyptians could not endure the eastern. They suspected one another guilty of Heresy, the one were always persuaded that St. Cyril's Chapters were heretical, and the others thought them orthodox. Besides, several eastern Bishops had not condemned Nestorius, and were not inclined to condemn him, thinking him innocent. Nevertheless one of the Conditions of the Peace was, that they should curse Nestorius. Lastly, some of those who signed the Deposition of Nestorius, would not add any thing against his Doctrine, saying, that the Emperor exacted no more of them, and to communicate with the Patriarchs. Thus the Bishops of Cilicia Prima explained themselves in the Letter that they wrote to the Emperor in the presence of Aristolaus. But this did not content Saint Cyril, and therefore he sent Beronicianus Bishop of Tyre to beg of the Emperor, that he would by his Edict force all the Bishops not only to condemn the Person of Nestorius, but also to condemn his impious Doctrines, and at the same time to confess that there is but one Son only, who ought not

C. 194. to be divided into two, born of God after an ineffable Manner before all Time, and born of the Virgin in Time according to the Flesh. That in this Sense she is the Mother of God, because one and the same Person is God and Man both, the Word being incarnate without Confusion, or Mixture; and that this Word is passible in the human Nature, altho' he be impassible in the divine. This Edict was sent to Aristolaus, who presented it to the Bishops of Cilicia Prima, and the eastern Bishops. Acacius Bishop of Meletine having heard that St. Cyril obtained this Edict, congratulated him for it by a Letter, and advised him to send some zealous and faithful Persons with Aristolaus, who might compel all the Bishops to condemn the Doctrines of Nestorius, and Theodorus, and those who affirm, that there are two Natures in Jesus Christ, which act distinctly, and that plainly, and without Ambiguities, because he had seen some Nestorians in Germanicia, who by asserting, that there are two Natures in Jesus Christ, introduced two Persons, and two Sons, separating the two Natures, and making them to act distinctly.

C. 165. At the same time St. Cyril wrote a Letter to John Bishop of Antioch, in which he tells him, that it was said, that some eastern Bishops, who seemed to con-

C. 209, & 210. demn Nestorius, and to curse his Doctrine, did yet revive his Errors. He assures him, that he did not believe it; but he pray'd him, that if there were any such, he should take notice of them, and confute them. He thought, that it was not sufficient for all that to condemn Nestorius, and his Doctrines, because they might evade it, by saying, that they condemn'd him for nothing but because he would not give the V. Mary the Name of the Mother of God; but when they curse Nestorius and his Doctrine, they must profess the Faith contain'd in the Edict before-mentioned. He wrote also to Aristolaus not to permit those, who do not confess this Faith, to continue in the Priesthood, and Clergy. He wrote to John Bishop of Antioch, and Aristolaus, particularly against Theodoret, having heard by a Priest named Daniel, that he had not condemned the Person or Doctrine of Nestorius. He tells another Bishop also named Mosæus, that the Abbot Maximus accused him of having asserted the Blasphemies of Nestorius.

The Councils.

John Bishop of Antioch having receiv'd this Edict C. 169. of the Emperor, was surpriz'd, that the eastern Bishops having so manifestly condemned Nestorius and his Doctrine, and given so great Proofs of the Soundness of their Faith, should yet be suspected, and a new Confession of Faith be exacted of them. He wrote to Proclus Bishop of Constantinople, that this was very unjust dealing; that they would neither add any thing, nor take from the Nicene Creed; that they understood it as the Fathers of both the eastern and western Churches had explain'd it; that they rejected the Hereticks that had corrupted it; that this may suffice for their Justification, altho' it was needless, having done four Years since all that was desir'd of them, at the time when Paul Bishop of Emesa came out of Egypt. That he could not imagine for what reason they sought out new Matter of quarrel; that the Bishops of the Provinces adjoyning to the Sea, of Phœnicia, Cilicia, Arabia, Mesopotamia, Osroene, Euphratesia, and the lower Syria, are of the same Judgment, and have approv'd what they have done; that he prayed him to prevent those new Troubles, and to suffer the eastern and Asian Churches to have some respite, and to protect them against the Heathens, Jews, and some Nestorians of Cilicia, who yet held out their Opposition. He wrote the same thing to St. Cyril, who reply'd to his Letter, that he rejoyced to see him in so good a Mind, and that he desired nothing so much as to see Union and Peace in the Church, and to see Collect. of Lupus, those Scandals to cease, which John Bishop of Antioch had once suppressed, and he would endeavour fully C. 207. to extinguish for the future.

By this he seemed to let the eastern Bishops be quiet hereafter, but there were some troublesome unquiet Spirits, who raised a new Contest, which troubled the Church a long time. Some of the Clergy and Monks of Antioch seeing that they could not create any further Disturbances to the Bishops about the Business of Nestorius, because there was no Discourse of him or his Writings, which had been plainly condemned, noised it abroad, that they revived the same Errors under the Name of Diodorus of Tarsus, and Theodorus of Mopsuesta, whose Writings they intended to publish. Hereupon they wrote a large Letter, which they sent to St. Cyril. At the C. 206. same time the Abbot Maximus, who dwelt at Antioch, disgraced the eastern Bishops, saying, that they were all Nestorians, that they pretended to approve of the Nicene Creed, but they put what Sense they pleased upon it. Theodotus Bishop of Ancyra, Acacius Collect. of Lupus, Bishop of Melitina, and Rabulas Bishop of Edessa, C. 193, who were the most zealous against the Nestorians, 220. declared themselves first against the Writings of Theodorus Bishop of Mopsuesta. Rabulas and Acacius wrote a circular Letter to the Bishops of Armenia, to oblige them to reject the Books of Theodorus, which they had translated into their own Language. The Bishops of Armenia being met upon that account, addressed themselves to Proclus Bishop of Constantinople, to know what they should do upon the occasion, and sent two Priests with the Letters of Acacius and Rabulas, and the Books of Theodorus. Proclus having received these Pieces, composed a Writing, intituled, an Epiſtle to the Armenians, in which he explains the Doctrine of the Church concerning the Incarnation, affirming, that to avoid all Ambiguities, we ought to confeſs, that one Perſon of the Holy Trinity was incarnate. To this Writing he joyned ſuch Propoſitions as he thought heretical, or at leaſt ſuſpected of Hereſy, which were extracted out of Theodorus's Books, but he did not name him. He ſent this Writing to John Biſhop of Antioch by his Deacon Theodotus. The Biſhops of the Eaſt being met at Antioch, read this Work of Proclus there, approved it, ſubſcribed it, and ſent it to him, but did not condemn the Extracts of Theodorus's Books. St. Cyril having received this Piece of Proclus by Baſilius the Deacon, the Letters of the Biſhops of Armenia, and the Extracts of Theodorus's Books, declared himſelf openly againſt the Works of the latter, and wrote to the Emperor, not to ſuffer them to be approved; and to John Biſhop of Antioch, that he ſhould condemn them. Acacius Biſhop of Melitina wrote alſo to John Biſhop of Antioch, againſt the Writings of Theodorus. The Abbot Maximus, who was the principal Author of theſe new Broils, had put the Name of Theodorus Biſhop of Mopſueſta, and Diodorus, at the Head of thoſe Extracts which St. Proclus had annexed to his Letter, and would have the eaſtern Biſhops to curſe Theodorus. The Monks of Armenia took the pains to diſpoſe theſe Extracts over all the eaſtern Parts; and going from City to City, boldly declar'd, that they ought to condemn them, and curſe the Author of them.

John Biſhop of Antioch complained of this firſt to Proclus and St. Cyril; aſſuring them, that the eaſtern Biſhops would rather ſeparate than condemn the Memory of Theodorus. Whereupon St. Cyril wrote to Proclus, that though he believed the Works of Theodorus to be full of Impieties and Blaſphemies, yet he thought it more convenient for Peace ſake, and to prevent a Separation of the eaſtern Biſhops not to ſpeak of him, chiefly, becauſe he died in the Communion of the Church. Proclus wrote on his part to Maximus, that he diſapproved his Carriage, that he ought to be obedient to his Biſhop, and not trouble the Eaſt; and that he would ſend his Deacon back again, when his Writing is ſign'd, and the Propoſitions annexed at the end of it, be rejected.

John Biſhop of Antioch, and the eaſtern Biſhops, could not hold their Peace, ſeeing the Memory of a Biſhop who was of ſo great Reputation among them to be aſſaulted. Being aſſembled therefore at Antioch in 436, or 437, they wrote three Letters for the Defence of Theodorus, the one to the Emperor Theodoſius, the other to Proclus Biſhop of Conſtantinople, and the third to St. Cyril.

Facund. l. 2. c. 2. In the Letter to Theodoſius, they humbly repreſent to this Emperor, that it is unjuſt and prejudicial to the Church to quarrel at the Writings or Memory of Theodorus; that this great Man for five Years together was a profeſſed Enemy and Oppoſer of Hereſy; that he was commended, admired by all the World, and highly eſteem'd by Theodoſius the Great; that he was the Scholar of Flavian and St. Chryſoſtome; that having written a great deal, it is likely he may have ſome Expreſſions which may give ſome ground for the Accuſations brought againſt him; that the ancient Fathers have uſed the ſame Modes of ſpeaking, which are reproved in the Works of Theodorus. Laſtly, that thoſe, who bring this Accuſation are troubleſome Perſons, who are delighted in nothing but Diſturbances and Confuſion.

Ibid. l. 8. c. 3, 5. l. 11. c. 14.

In the Letter to Proclus they commend his Book, blame thoſe that were the Authors of the Diviſion, who accuſe their Biſhops, and not content to raiſe Sedition againſt the Living, deſire to do it againſt the Dead, and make their Attempts to condemn Theodorus. Theodorus, who in his Life-time never receiv'd any Reproof, who was always commended, and eſteemed by the Emperor and Biſhops, who ever oppoſed himſelf againſt the Hereſies, and wrote 10000 Volumes to confute them. They conclude this Letter by maintaining, that we may find an infinite number of ſuch like Paſſages, as thoſe of Theodorus, in Ignatius, Euſtathius, St. Athanaſius, St. Baſil, Flavian, Diodorus, St. John Chryſoſtome, St. Ambroſe, and Atticus. From whence they infer, that if we condemn Theodorus, we muſt alſo do the ſame to them, becauſe there is none of them out of which the like Paſſages may not be taken, eſpecially, if we ſever them from what goes before, and follows after, as they have done in thoſe that are extracted from the Writings of Theodorus.

The Councils.

Laſtly, in the Letter to St. Cyril they ſay, that being aſſembled upon the account of Proclus's Letter, they thought it needleſs to enter in a new Conteſt concerning the Writings of Theodorus, all things being at peace; that it is poſſible that there may be in the Works of that Author ſome Places, which are capable of an ill Senſe; but there were others, where he delivers his Judgment plainly in a very orthodox Manner; that we may meet with the like Expreſſions in the holy Fathers; particularly in St. Athanaſius, Theophilus, and Proclus's Letters; that it is very dangerous to blemiſh the Memory of a Man, who ſerved and defended the Church for ſeveral Years; and ſo much the more, becauſe by condemning him we muſt involve ſeveral of the Fathers in the ſame Fate; that 'twas this that made the Defenders of Neſtorius ſo victorious, who were amazed to ſee themſelves curſed with ſuch Biſhops as dy'd in the Communion of the Church, and in ſo great Eſteem; that Theodorus having oppoſed the Hereticks was obliged to reject their Errors more plainly; and to make uſe of ſuch Terms, as might ſeem to favour the oppoſite Errors.

Fac. l. 1. c. 1. l. 8. c. 4. l. 11. c. 1. 8.

The Emperor made anſwer to John and his Synod, that he had heard by Proclus what a ſtir ſome Perſons began to make in the Eaſt, and exhorts him to provide for the Peace, and encounter thoſe who are the Promoters of the Diſturbance; that his Intention is, that all thoſe that are under his Government, ſhould live in Peace, and chiefly the Church; that they might be confident of this, and therefore be more active to further and ſecure the Peace of the Church.

Collect. of Lupus, c. 29.

Proclus alſo gave them a very civil Anſwer, declaring to them, that when he wrote his Book, he had no deſign to condemn Theodorus; that his Deacon Theodotus had no Order to do it, and that he was contented to reject theſe Propoſitions, which ſeemed to him falſe or erroneous, without naming the Authors.

Fac. l. 8. c. 22.

Laſtly, although St. Cyril openly declared himſelf againſt the Writings of Theodorus of Mopſueſta, yet he wrote to John Biſhop of Antioch, as he had before done to Proclus; that he approved, that for the Peace of the Church, they ſhould content themſelves to condemn the falſe Propoſitions taken out of the Books of Theodorus, without meddling with his Memory. This Letter is recited in the fifth Council, where it is accuſed of Falſhood, becauſe they pretend, that it doth not agree with the other Letters of St. Cyril; but if they conſider them well, they are not contrary to this. In it he condemns the Writings of Theodorus and Diodorus, and reproves thoſe that commend the Doctrine of theſe Authors, but he doth not pronounce Anathema againſt their Perſons; on the contrary, in his Letter to Proclus, he is of the ſame Opinion as in this. It cannot be prov'd, that he changed his Judgment, or that he ever was againſt the Peace, in which he had engag'd himſelf.

Act. Conn. 4. Coll. 5.

We would here make an end of the Council of Epheſus, but before we paſs to the Hiſtory of the Council of Chalcedon, it is neceſſary to add ſomething by way of Illuſtration upon ſuch Points of the Hiſtory, as do admit of ſome Difficulty.

And firſt, it is demanded, who it was, that call'd the Council of Epheſus? It is evident, that it was Theodoſius the younger. The Cardinals Baronius and Bellarmine both agree in this, but they pretend that this Emperor did it by the Pope's Authority, and folfollowing his Judgment and Advice. This Supposition is groundless, and indeed it is easie to prove by the course of the History, that it was impossible, that the Emperor should take the Pope's Advice, when he called the Council. Saint Cælestine, having examined the Cause of Nestorius referred to his Council by both Parties, wrote to St. Cyril, that he should certifie Nestorius, that if he did not change his Opinion, within ten Days after the Declaration of this Sentence to him, that he was excommunicated and deposed, and that they would put another Person in his place. This Letter is dated Aug. 11. Anno. 430. The Pope speaks nothing here of celebrating a Council, but on the contrary he supposeth it needless to call one, and that it was not yet mentioned.

The Pope's Letter was carried to Alexandria by Possidonius. Saint Cyril called a Council of Bishops there, to signifie the Pope's Judgment to Nestorius. The Letter of the Synod is dated Novem. 3. of the same year. The Letter for the assembling the Council of Ephesus bears date Nov. 19. By this 'tis evident that the Emperor had not resolved to call this Council, till he knew what the Synod of Alexandria had decreed. Now it is manifest, that it was not possible in so small a time as passed between the holding of this Council, and the Date of his Letter, to write to Rome, and receive Advice from thence. Therefore the Council of Ephesus was called by the Emperor, and the Pope knew nothing of it, the Pope having passed his Judgment before. Yea, moreover it seems, that the Emperor's design in calling the Council was to weaken or rectifie the Pope's Sentence. Lastly, the Pope was called to it, as other Bishops, and he acknowledges in his Letter written to Theodosius, that it was the Emperor who ordered the Calling of a Synod.

The Question concerning the Presidency is of greater difficulty. It is beyond Controversie that St. Cyril did preside in this Council, but some enquire, whether it was in the quality of Legate of the Holy See, or in his own Name. It is certain, that the Pope had entrusted him wholly with the Execution of the Sentence which he had given against Nestorius; but it doth not appear in the least, that he had any Commission to assist at, or preside over the Council of Ephesus in his Name; but on the contrary, he sent his Legates on purpose to it, who had strict orders to do nothing but with the concurrence of St. Cyril; but he doth not say, that St. Cyril shall assist with them at the Council in his Name, nor that he continues the same power to him, which he lately gave for this purpose. And indeed, in the relation which the Council gives the Emperor, the time, which went before the Council is distinguished from that which followed; and it is said, that St. Cælestine had commissioned St. Cyril before the Council, but after he sent the Bishops Arcadius and Projectus, and the Deacon Philip, on purpose to supply his place in the Council.

Nevertheless St. Cyril in the Subscriptions of the first, second, and third Action, takes the Title of the Deputy of Cælestine. Liberatus and Evagrius give him also the same Title. Some pretend, that it hath been added to the Subscription by some Scribe, or that it ought to be understood of the time which went before the Council. I rather believe, that St. Cyril having born that Title before the Council, held it in the Council it self, though he had it not then; but it doth not follow from thence that he presided in the Pope's Name, or in the Quality of his Deputy, for if he had presided under that Title, it is certain, that upon his default the other Legates of the Pope ought to have presided in his place, and had the first Seat. Now 'tis evident, that not they, but Juvenal Bishop of Jerusalem presided in the fourth and fifth Action, in which Saint Cyril became a Petitioner. Wherefore 'twas not under the Title of Legate to the Pope, that St. Cyril presided, since in his absence Juvenal was preferred before the Pope's Legates; 'Twas because he was the first of the Patriarchs, who were present in Person at the Council.

The Councils.

There are several Objections made against the Nature of this Council, and the Management of it. Some say, that it ought to be accounted no better than a tumultuous and rash Assembly, where all things were carried by passion and noise, and not for an Oecumenical Council. That St. Cyril held it against the consent of the Commissioners, whom the Emperor sent to call them together; that not only Nestorius and his Party, but also several other Orthodox Bishops opposed it; that he scorned to wait for the Eastern Bishops, who would have soon arrived, and who desired him to wait for them; that he did not stay for the Legates of the Holy See, nor any of the Western Bishops; that his Synod was made up of the Ægyptian Bishops, and some Bishops of Asia, who were wholly devoted to his Will; that it was he that did all, and ordered all in the Council, although he was Nestorius's Enemy, and one whom he had objected against for his Judge; because he looked upon him as his Enemy; Had not Nestorius therefore the same reason to object against him? the manner in which he acted against Nestorius, and the rashness he was guilty of in condemning him, make it Credible, that he was animated by nothing but Passion. He caused Nestorius to be summoned twice in a day. Nestorius answered, that he was ready to appear when the Eastern and Western Bishops were come, and the Council was full; that he refused not to be judged, but he would not be judged by his Enemies only; these Excuses appeared reasonable. St. Chrysostome alledged the like to exempt him from appearing before the Synod of Theophilus. Nevertheless St. Cyril imitating his Uncle and Predecessor Theophilus, accepted the Accusation, proceeded against him, and was the first that gave his Voice against him, and caused him to be Condemned. This St. Isidore of Damiata reproved St. Cyril for telling him, 'That several Persons laughed at 'him, and at the Tragedy which he had acted at 'Ephesus; that it was said openly that he sought 'nothing but revenge upon his Enemy; that in this 'he imitated his Uncle Theophilus; and although 'there was a great deal of difference between the 'Persons accused, the carriage of the Accusers was 'much the same; that he had better have been quiet, 'and not revenged his private quarrels at the ex'pence of the Church, and so raise an eternal dis'cord among Christians, under a pretence of Piety. These are the very words of Isidore, which he speaks to him in kindness. Gennadius Bishop of Constantinople compares this conduct of St. Cyril's to Theophilus's, and calls him the second Scourge of Alexandria. The Proceedings in the Judgment seem to prove it more clearly, that St. Cyril and the Bishops of his Party were hurried by Passion; that they greatly aimed at the Condemnation of Nestorius, and were afraid of nothing more than of the coming of the Eastern Bishops, for fear they should not be able to do what they pleased; for in their first Session they cited Nestorius twice, read the Testimonies of the Fathers, St. Cyril's Letters and twelve Chapters, Nestorius's Writings, and all gave their Judgments. Was ever any business concluded with so much haste; the least matter of this nature requires an whole Session. How could they throughly examine St. Cyril's 12 Propositions in so small a time, which need so much Explication, and have caused so many Disputes? How could they compare so many passages of Nestorius's Sermons, with what went before and came after to find the true Sense? How could they be sure of the Judgment of the Ancient Fathers in so short a time? All these things required a long and serious Examination for several days together; but the Bishops of the Council were afraid that they should not finish it at one Session, and therefore sate close to it from Morning to Night, to judge this matter only for fear that things should happen otherwise, if they should stay till to morrow. The Sentence which they caused to be delivered to Nestorius, was made up of such Words, which discover the Passion they were in.

The Councils.

To Neſtorius another Judas. Was it not enough to condemn and depoſe him, but they muſt inſult over him with abuſive Words. Laſtly, this Council was ſo far from bringing Peace, that it brought nothing but trouble, diviſions, and ſcandals, into the Church of Jeſus Chriſt, ſo that that may be ſaid of this Council with a great deal more truth, which St. Gregory of Nazianzen ſaid of the Councils of his time. 'That he never ſaw an Aſſembly of Biſhops 'that had a good and happy Concluſion; that they 'always increaſed the Diſtemper rather than cured 'it; that the obſtinate Conteſts, and the ambition 'of Overcoming and Domineering, which ordinari-'ly reigns among them, renders them prejudicial, 'and ordinarily they, who are concerned to judge 'others are moved thereto by ill-will, rather than 'by a deſign to reſtrain the faults of others. This ſeems to agree to the Council of Epheſus better than any other Aſſembly of Biſhops. The Hiſtory of the Troubles that followed this Council, makes this ſufficiently evident, and we may ſay, that theſe Troubles were not appeaſed, but becauſe the Tranſactions of this Council were buried in ſilence. Theſe are the Objections which may be made againſt the form of the Council of Epheſus: I have neither diſſembled them, nor weakned them, that I may ſhew, that nothing which can be ſaid on this Argument is unanſwerable. At preſent I ſhall offer theſe Anſwers to the former Objections, viz.

The Council of Epheſus was called in the Uſual Forms. The Biſhops of all Countries of the Roman Empire were ſummoned to it. The Days appointed become, the Biſhops who were come to the City, where it was to be held, waited ſome days after; they did not begin it, till they knew, that the Men whom they waited for, would ſoon arrive, and that they were willing that the Council ſhould be begun without them; that though ſeveral Biſhops were not at firſt of that Opinion, and therefore oppoſed it, yet they yielded at laſt, and were preſent at the Council; that there remained no more than ten with Neſtorius; that the Emperor's Commiſſioner having read the Letter for the Calling of the Council, had done his Duty, and after that was free for the Biſhops to meet; that though the Pope's Legates were not come, yet it was Lawful to begin the Council without them, ſince the Day appointed for the beginning of it was over; that theſe Legates having read what was done in their abſence had approved it; that John Biſhop of Antioch, and the other Eaſtern Biſhops ought to have come to the Council according to their Summons; that they might have read and examined a-new what had paſſed, and ought not to have made a Schiſm, or ſeparated upon that account; that though they did judge Neſtorius at one Seſſion, and in one Day, he muſt blame himſelf for it, becauſe he would not appear; that he deſerved to be condemned for his Obſtinacy; that it was evident, that he had denied, that the Virgin Mary might be called the Mother of God, and that he uſed ſuch Expreſſions as ſeemed to divide the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt into two; that he was cited three times according to the Order of the Canons; that it was not neceſſary by the Laws of the Church to perform theſe Citations on ſeveral days; that it was Zeal and not Paſſion that made Saint Cyril to act ſo; that although he had had ſome differences with Neſtorius, that was no juſt impediment, that he might not be his Judge in the Council, eſpecially diſcuſſing a matter of Faith; that in the buſineſs of St. Chryſoſtome there was nothing meddled with that concerned the Faith; that it was not a General Council, but a private Synod called together by the contentious humour of Theophilus; that St. Iſidore and Gennadius were miſtaken through the falſe Reports that St. Cyril's Enemies had ſpread abroad of him; that afterward they themſelves acknowledged the Falſhood of them; that there were in the Council many Biſhops of Macedonia, Epirus, Achaia, Thracia, and Theſſaly, which could not be ſaid to be devoted to the Egyptian Faction; that Juvenal Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and the other Biſhops of Paleſtine could not be ſuſpected of holding Intelligence with them; that it is not credible that Memnon was ſo much Maſter of the Aſian Biſhops as to make them to yield to his Will againſt Juſtice and Innocence; that Judgment was pronounced after cognizance of the Cauſe; that they read the Nicene Creed, and examined the Doctrine of the Holy Fathers of the Church; to which, becauſe Neſtorius's Opinions were evidently contrary, they condemned him; that it is very rare to find a longer time allowed in any of the Ancient Councils for the Examination of a ſingle point of Faith; that they did neither approve nor examine St. Cyril's twelve Chapters, becauſe the Queſtion was not about them; but only to enquire whether Neſtorius had preached any Errors, and whether he deſerved to be Condemned; that they never after meddled with it; that on the Contrary his Condemnation was approved by almoſt all Orthodox Biſhops; that the Doctrine which the Council condemned as his was unanimouſly rejected by all the World; that the troubles which followed the Council, proceeded from nothing but the Headineſs of the Eaſtern Biſhops, who would at firſt right or wrong maintain their bad proceedings; that they have been happily appeaſed by the Peace, in which they have followed the Judgment of the Council, concerning the Perſon and Doctrine of Neſtorius. Laſtly, that the following Councils, and the Univerſal Church have received the Council of Epheſus, and have acknowledged it for a General Council.

The Councils.

From the Form let us come to the Matter it ſelf. Was Neſtorius in an Error? Had St. Cyril delivered nothing contrary to the Truth? Did not his twelve Chapters contain in them the Errors of Arius, or Apollinaris? or at leaſt, the ſame Error which was after maintained by Eutyches? Were not the Eaſtern Biſhops of Neſtorius's Judgment? If John Biſhop of Antioch were not, yet were not Theodoret, Andrew of Samoſata, Helladius Biſhop of Tarſus, Eutherius Biſhop of Tyana, and above all, Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, and all the Biſhops who were expelled and depoſed with him, becauſe they would not ſubſcribe the Condemnation of Neſtorius? Laſtly, was there none of St. Cyril's ſide in the Error oppoſite to Neſtorius's. As for Neſtorius we have already ſhewn wherein his Error conſiſted, and proved, that there was a lawful ground of Condemning him, becauſe though he pretended to acknowledge the intimate Union of the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, yet he would not conſent to the true Conſequences, which followed from that Union, and made uſe himſelf of ſuch compariſons and expreſſions, as did plainly intimate a Moral Union only. His obſtinate rejection of the term of the Mother of God, and other expreſſions commonly uſed in the Church, as for Example, That God was born, ſuffered, and dyed, &c. His way in which he explained the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt, ſaying, that God inhabited in Man as in a Temple, that he was cloathed with the Manhood, that he was joyned to the Man, that he beheld himſelf in the Manhood, as in a Looking-glaſs; the compariſons that he made of the Union of the Humane and Divine Nature in Jeſus Chriſt, to the Union of Man and Wife, of the Spirit and Soul in a Righteous Man, and ſeveral other ways of ſpeaking of the like nature, to which he was ſo much addicted, that he ſhewed an averſion for thoſe that ſignified the Natural and Subſtantial Union of the two Natures, were evidences that he did not ſincerely allow of ſuch an Union. And although there had been no other reaſon beſides the Scandal which he gave by ſpeaking after ſuch a manner as might make Men believe, that he was in the Error of Photinus, or Paulus Samoſatenus, that had been enough to condemn him, if he would not change thoſe Expreſſions, and conform to thoſe of the Church. Now it was ſo in this caſe; for when they ſpeak to the People, who were accuſtomed to hear theſe Words, God was born, God is dead, &c. when they diſcourſed of Jeſus Chriſt, and told them that theſe

Pro-

The Councils.

Propoſitions were falſe and unſufferable, they immediately imagined that they denied Jeſus Chriſt to be God, and by this means it was that the Neſtorian Preachers, and their Friends, raiſed ſo great a Scandal among the Faithful at Conſtantinople. At firſt they thought him of the Opinion of Paulus Samoſatenus; but the thing being better examined, they knew, that his Error was more ſubtle. St. Cyril himſelf acknowledged it, and owned that it were better not to meddle with this Queſtion. But becauſe Neſtorius perſiſted ſtill to give offence to the People, and to ſpeak in a way contrary to the Church, and would not change it, they were forced to condemn him. John Biſhop of Antioch, and his beſt Friends, who thought him of Orthodox Sentiments diſapproved his manner of ſpeaking, and adviſed him to alter it, and own, that the Virgin might be called the Mother of God. He would not do it at firſt, but at laſt he did it, but too ſlowly, and after ſuch a manner as ſhewed that he did it not heartily. He was therefore juſtly condemned. But did not his Adverſary alſo deſerve the ſame Fate? Was not he of Arius and Apollinaris's Opinion, or at leaſt of Eutyches's? Did not his twelve famous Chapters contain ſome Errors? Had not the Eaſtern Biſhops reaſon to reject them? Did the Council of Epheſus do well to approve them?

As to the Opinions of St. Cyril, he hath explain'd himſelf too clearly to be ſuſpected as guilty of the Errors of Arius and Apollinaris. He hath ſo often expreſly rejected them, and hath removed the Accuſation ſo fully, that it can't be ſaid, that he hath approved the Errors of theſe two Hereticks, by denying with the one of them, that Jeſus Chriſt hath a Soul, and with the other, that his Soul was deſtitute of Underſtanding and Reaſon. Nor can we with greater Truth ſay, that he hath confounded the two Natures in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt; or that he allows of a change of one Nature into another, ſince he hath always diſtinguiſhed the two Natures, and rejected the Error of thoſe, who ſay, that they are changed, or confounded, or mixed. He diſtinguiſhes them ſo elegantly in his ſecond Letter to Neſtorius, that he was forced to own in his Anſwer to him, that he allows a diſtinction of the two Natures, that he acknowledged, that the Word had not his Original from the Virgin, and that it was not poſſible that the Word ſhould ſuffer. He always confeſſed this Doctrine, when the Diſpute was at the hotteſt. Laſtly, When he made Peace with the Eaſtern Biſhops, he made no ſcruple to acknowledge the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, united in one Perſon; inſomuch that John Biſhop of Antioch, Theodoret, and almoſt all the Eaſtern Biſhops, have owned, that his Letter and Doctrine were Orthodox. But although it is manifeſt that St. Cyril was of Orthodox Sentiments, yet we muſt own, that it hath happened to him, as it hath to all others almoſt who ſuffer themſelves to be tranſported with Paſſion in Diſputes, that is to ſay, by oppoſing an Error ſo earneſtly, he ſeems to incline to the contrary; for having oppoſed thoſe Perſons, who divided the two Natures, he uſed ſuch Expreſſions to denote the Union, as gave Occaſion to believe, that they were confounded. This Facundus Biſhop of Hermianum wiſely obſerves: 'St. Cyril, 'ſaith he, having undertaken to oppoſe Neſtorius, 'who divided Jeſus Chriſt into two, that he might 'reject this Error more fully and plainly, made choice 'of all ſuch Terms, as are moſt proper to expreſs 'the Union of the two Natures; whereas the An'cient Fathers, writing againſt Apollinaris, who 'confounded them, laboured moſt to expreſs their 'Diſtinction. But we ought not to think for all 'that, that St. Cyril diſowns the Difference of the 'two Natures, or that the Ancients denied the Unity 'of the Perſon.

The Difference of the Conteſts made them ſpeak differently. The Expreſſion, which comes neareſt the Opinion of the Eutychians, and which is chiefly urged, is this, One Incarnate Nature. St. Cyril uſes it often, and they affirm, That he is the firſt of the Fathers that hath mentioned it: For though it is ſaid, that he took it out of St. Athanaſius, yet it is very probable, that the Writings attributed to Athanaſius, out of which St. Cyril is pretended to have taken it, is rather Apollinaris's than this Father's, as the Orthodox have ſince found out, and maintained againſt the Severians. This Expreſſion ſeems directly contrary to the Faith of the Church, which believes two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, and was diſpleaſed not only with the Eaſtern Biſhops, but with St. Iſidore of Damiata, who wrote to St. Cyril, that he ought not to uſe it, becauſe by ſaying One Nature, he excludes the Two. Nevertheleſs, St. Cyril and the Egyptians uſed it commonly, and preferred it before others. Eutyches and his Friends have ſince looked upon it as the Foundation of their Doctrine, and Flavian himſelf comes near it in his Apologetical Letter to the Emperor. The Council of Chalcedon would not make uſe of it, and the Eaſtern Biſhops rejected it. But the Egyptian Biſhops having ſhewed them that it was St. Cyril's, they dare not condemn it. Several Greek Authors have uſed it ſince, but it is ſeldom found in the Latin Fathers, and there are very few Divines which have approved of it. There are divers Senſes given to this Expreſſion: Some ſay, that St. Cyril means by this word Nature, the Perſon, and that he uſes theſe Terms promiſcuouſly, as it appears in his Defence of his eighth Chapter, where he ſays, That Jeſus Chriſt is one Perſon, or Nature; that is, One Hypoſtaſis. In this Senſe, there is no Difficulty in this Propoſition, but the true Senſe of St. Cyril is not, that there is but One Nature in Jeſus Chriſt, but that the Nature of the Word was Incarnate: For he never ſays plainly, That there is but one Nature in Jeſus Chriſt; but, that there is but One Nature of the Word which is Incarnate; and having ſaid that, he explains how it being Incarnate was united to the Manhood. Thus St. Cyril explains himſelf in ſeveral places, but chiefly in his Letters to Succoſius and Acacius. He acknowledges indeed that the Humane and Divine Nature are diſtinct in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt; but for fear that Diſtinction ſhould be abuſed, and they ſhould divide theſe two Natures into two Perſons, he affected to uſe a Term which ſignified this Union without denoting any diviſion; which he did, not only to oppoſe the Neſtorians the moſt ſtrongly, but to ſatisfie the moſt Zealous of his own Party, who could not endure to hear of two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, and who were diſpleaſed that it was approved in the Confeſſion of Faith made by the Weſtern Biſhops.

The Councils.

As to the Chapters of St. Cyril, which made ſo much noiſe, we muſt own, that theſe twelve Propoſitions were very ſubtle, and that ſome of them might be badly conſtrued. This St. Cyril himſelf was convinced of; but 'tis not true, that they are not as well capable of a good Senſe. He explain'd them in ſuch a manner, as might ſatisfie the Eaſtern Biſhops. They were read in the Council of Epheſus, but they were approved by Name, as his ſecond Letter to Neſtorius was. When the Peace was concluded, the Eaſtern Biſhops were not obliged to ſubſcribe nor approve them, nor did they require it of St. Cyril to retract them. They were not ſpoken of in the Council of Chalcedon, nor was Theodoret obliged to recant what he had written againſt St. Cyril's Chapters. They read alſo in this Council Ibas's Letter, where it is ſaid, That the Eaſtern Biſhops believed St. Cyril an Heretick, before he had explain'd his Chapters. All this proves, that the twelve Chapters of St. Cyril were never made a part of the Faith of the Church, and that the Eaſtern Biſhops are not to be condemned for oppoſing and rejecting them. Nor can we reaſonably believe them guilty of any Errors in their carriage as to Neſtorius. It is evident, that they thought him of Orthodox Sentiments, and at the very time when they ſtuck cloſeſt to him, they plainly rejected the Errors that were attributed to him. They alſo adviſed him from the very firſt to approve the Term of the Mother of God; and ſhewed him, that in one Senſe it might be ſaid, That the Son of God, who was born before all Ages, was alſo born of Mary. But nothing better proves, that the Eaſtern Biſhops never departed from the Orthodox Truth, than the Objections which they made againſt St. Cyril's twelve Chapters; for though they condemned the Expreſſion of this Father, they acknowledged, That there was but one Perſon in Jeſus Chriſt, and owned that the two Natures are united in a very ſtrict Union, and cannot be divided or ſeparated, but they oppoſe any Confuſion, Mixture or Change of the two Natures, Errors which they thought to lie couched in St. Cyril's twelve Chapters. They always profeſſed the ſame Doctrine both in and after the Council of Epheſus. They always proteſted that they acknowledged but one Chriſt, perfect God, and perfect Man, and that the two Natures were united in one Perſon. When the Peace was making, there was no Controverſie about the Confeſſion of Faith, they agreed without any trouble with St. Cyril in that, who acknowledged that they never were in Neſtorius's Errors, though they had been before accuſed of it. Theodoret himſelf, who was one of the moſt furious againſt St. Cyril's twelve Chapters, had no ſooner ſeen his firſt Letter, but he owned it to be Orthodox. All the difficulty which can be raiſed here, is as to Alexander Biſhop of Hierapolis, Eutherius Biſhop of Tyana, and ſome other Biſhops who would not be comprehended in the Peace, or yielded to it only by force. But we muſt own, that theſe Biſhops themſelves did ſeemingly profeſs the Orthodox Faith; and though they found fault with St. Cyril's Expoſition of the Faith, 'twas not becauſe they denied the Union of the two Natures in one Perſon, but becauſe they were afraid that there was ſome Term which made it ſuſpicious, that there was but one Nature in Jeſus Chriſt. They never defended the Doctrine attributed to Neſtorius, but maintained that Neſtorius had no other than what they thought Orthodox. 'Twas a Queſtion of Fact, and not of Right, that divided them. But their Obſtinacy and Separation gave occaſion to ſuſpect, that they were of Neſtorius's Opinion, or at leaſt was ſufficient to make them to be condemned as Diſturbers of the Peace, and Schiſmaticks.

The Councils.

Laſtly, The chief Subject of theſe Conteſts which were raiſed between the Egyptian and Eaſtern Biſhops at this Juncture, may be ſaid to proceed from hence, that they attributed the Quality of the Divine and Humane Natures, which were in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt after different Manners: For the Eaſtern Biſhops could hardly underſtand, how the Qualities of the Humane Nature could be attributed to the Divine, and the Properties of the Divine Nature to the Humane; and the Egyptians urged this Communication of Terms to an Exceſs, as has not ſince been followed.

'Tis for this Reaſon, that the Eaſtern Biſhops being deſirous to take away all Matter of Conteſt, have annexed to the End of their Confeſſion of Faith: 'We know, that as to thoſe Qualities which Holy 'Scripture attributes to our Lord, there are ſome, 'which great Divines have made common to both 'Natures, as agreeing to one and the ſame Perſon; 'and there are others which they attribute to the 'two Natures ſeverally, referring to the Divinity 'of Jeſus Chriſt thoſe, which are more ſublime, and 'to the Humanity thoſe, that are more mean, and 'unworthy of the Divine Nature.

We have ſeen that Neſtorius would never allow it to be ſaid, that God is born, dead, or hath ſuffered, but would ſuffer them to be ſaid of Chriſt. The Eaſtern Biſhops alſo would very hardly *allow theſe Expreſſions, and deſired that ſome ſofter Terms might be added to explain them. St. Cyril and the Egyptians uſed them upon all Occaſions; they ſcrupled not to ſay, The Immortal is dead, Life is dead, God is crucified, Humane Fleſh is become the Giver of Life, and to be adored: Yea, ſome of them, as Acacius Biſhop of Melitina, maintained this Expreſſion, That the Word was born, died, hath ſuffered, and applied it to the Divinity, or Divine Nature of Jeſus Chriſt. This was the Original of the greateſt part of the Diſputes, which reigned in this Age, which we are now ſpeaking of, and in the next. This was the Cauſe of the miſunderſtanding between the Eaſtern and Egyptian Biſhops, the Pretence of their Diviſion, and the Subject of their Conteſts.

Of Chalcedon.

Cyril. Ep. ad Cæleſt. 1. p. Conc. Ep. c 14. Socr. l. 7. c. 32.

ALthough all the Eaſtern Patriarchs ſeemed to be agreed about the Conteſts, which had ſo long troubled them, yet private Perſons were not united in their Opinions, and ſeveral there were on both ſides that ſtirred up Diviſions in both the Churches. Among the Eaſterns there were ſome ſecret Neſtorians, who ſought by any means to revenge the Diſpoſition of Neſtorius; and among the Egyptians there were others, that carried the Union of the two Natures too far, making but one of the two, and could not endure any ſhould acknowledge Two after the Union. The Monks eſpecially were of that Opinion, publiſhed it every where, and condemned all thoſe that would not embrace it. After the Depoſition of Neſtorius, the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, and Alexandria were united; but becauſe the Intereſt of theſe two Sees were different, they did not continue Friends long. The Biſhop of Conſtantinople would have the ſecond Place among the Patriarchs, and rule over the Dioceſes of Aſia and Pontus; the Biſhop of Alexandria diſputed his Claim, yet himſelf aimed to bring one Part of the Eaſt under his Juriſdiction. The Biſhop of Antioch did not much regard the Preference of the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, but he would not ſubmit to the Biſhop of Alexandria, nor endure him to take away his Provinces from him. Theſe things being controverted in 439, between Proclus Patriarch of Conſtantinople, Theodoret in Place of John Biſhop of Antioch, and the Deacon Dioſcorus, Deputy for the Patriarch of Alexandria, an Order was made among them, That the Canons of the Councils of Nice and Conſtantinople ſhould be obſerved; that the Biſhop of Alexandria ſhould be confined to Egypt; that the Eaſtern Biſhop ſhould exerciſe his Juriſdiction over the Eaſtern Churches only hereafter, and not concern himſelf hereafter with the Affairs of the Dioceſes of Aſia and Pontus; and that the Biſhops of Conſtantinople ſhould have the ſecond Place according to the Canon of the Council of Conſtantinople. Dioſcorus oppoſed this Regulation with all his Power, and accuſed Theodoret of having betrayed upon this Occaſion the Intereſts of the Churches of Alexandria and Antioch, but he had the Management of the Biſhop of the Imperial City, who was in great favour at Court, and might much advantage or hurt the Eaſtern Biſhops.

Of Chalcedon.

Rabulas Biſhop of Edeſſa, who was one of the violent Enemies of the Memory of Theodorus, and the moſt zealous Defender of the manner of ſpeaking uſed by the Egyptians, being dead, Ibas a Prieſt was put in his Place, who was of the juſt contrary Judgment, and was ſuſpected to be a Neſtorian. Rabulas having left in his Church ſeveral Perſons of the ſame Opinion, who could not endure any Expreſſions, which looked like Theodorus's or Neſtorius's, he did never enjoy any quiet. They had accuſed him already, while he was yet but Prieſt, and while John Biſhop of Antioch was yet alive, of defending the Neſtorian Principles, refuſing to ſubſcribe Proclus's Writing, and to condemn the Propoſitions of Theodorus annexed to it, but on the contrary, tranſlating them them into Syriack, and disperſing them in the Eaſt. Proclus, before whom he was accuſed, had ſent him to John Biſhop of Antioch, but the buſineſs went no further, either becauſe his Accuſers would not proſecute him before John Biſhop of Antioch, who was not a Favourer of them, or becauſe John Biſhop of Antioch had ſtifled the matter. When Ibas was made Biſhop, they revived theſe old Accuſations; Samuel, Cyrus, Maras, and Eulogius, Prieſts of his Church, whom he had excommunicated, accuſed him to Domnus who ſucceeded John, and preſented a Petition to him, accuſing him of being a Neſtorian. Domnus ordered him to appear to juſtifie himſelf; but becauſe it was in Lent, he put off the hearing him, till after the Feaſt was over, and yet ordered him to abſolve theſe Prieſts from the Excommunication. Ibas permitted Domnus his Governor to do with him as he pleaſed; and Domnus abſolved them from their Excommunication, becauſe of the Feaſt, but upon Condition, that they ſhould not go from Antioch, becauſe the Cauſe was not determined; and in caſe they went from thence before the buſineſs was ended, they ſhould be liable to greater Puniſhment. Maras and Eulogius ſtayed, but the other two went to Conſtantinople to accuſe Ibas, and to procure him other Judges. Domnus having called a Synod after the Feaſt asked the two Prieſts, which ſtaid at Antioch about them; and knowing of them, that their Fellows were gone to Conſtantinople, declared them falſe Accuſers; and that they were juſtly excommunicated, and that by their Flight they had render'd themſelves more blame-worthy. This Judgment was ſubſcribed by twelve Biſhops. Nevertheleſs Dioſcorus who ſucceeded St. Cyril in 444, revived the old Quarrel between the Egyptian and the Eaſtern Biſhops, and endeavoured to deſtroy the principal Biſhops of their Party. In this Enterprize he was aſſiſted and maintain'd by Eutyches, a Prieſt, and Abbot of the Monaſtery of Conſtantinople, who had great Intereſt at Court. This Monk was always one of the moſt zealous of the Egyptian Party, who ſtuck cloſe to the moſt rigid Expreſſions of St. Cyril, but carried things higher than he, and abſolutely refuſed to ſay, that there were two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt. He accuſed his Adverſaries of being of Neſtorius's Opinions, and they again reproved them for being Apollinarians. The greateſt part of the Eaſtern Monks were of Eutyches's Judgment, and accuſed their Biſhops for being Neſtorians. And becauſe they were in favour at Court, and ſome of theſe Biſhops were ſuſpected to be Neſtorians, they eaſily obtain'd an Edict againſt them. Theodoret ſuffered more than any Man elſe by it, as we have ſeen. Irenæus was depoſed, but juſtly. They appointed Judges for Ibas, and troubled ſeveral other Biſhops ſuſpected to be Neſtorians. They laboured alſo to go further, and under the Pretence, that the Eaſtern Biſhops were Defenders of the Memory of Theodorus and Diodorus, they would involve them all in the ſame Condemnation. Domnus and the Eaſtern Biſhops oppoſing this Attempt, wrote to the Emperor Theodoſius, that Eutyches revived the Error of Apollinaris; that he corrupted the Doctrine of the Church touching the Myſtery of the Incarnation, aſſerting, That the Humane and Divine Nature of Jeſus Chriſt are but one, and attributing the Sufferings to the Godhead; that he curſed Diodorus and Theodorus, with a deſign to maintain thoſe Errors, thoſe two Pillars of the Church, who had maintain'd the truth againſt the Hereticks of their time, and had been commended and eſteemed by the great Men of their Age. Eutyches to revenge himſelf upon theſe his Accuſers wrote to the Pope St. Leo, that the Error of Eutyches was revived by a private Faction. He dare not accuſe the Biſhop of Antioch, and the other Eaſtern Biſhops by name; but it is eaſie to ſee that he means them. St. Leo commends his Zeal, but would not openly declare himſelf againſt the Perſons whom Eutyches accuſed, not knowing particularly who they were. St. Leo's Anſwer bears Date June 1. 448.

The Judgment of Eutyches did legally belong to * Flavian, who was his Biſhop. This Patriarch was engaged for his own Intereſt to uphold the Eaſtern Church againſt the Egyptian, becauſe the Biſhops of Alexandria contended with him about the Prerogatives and Privileges, which he pretended to, where-as the Biſhop of Antioch, and the Eaſtern Church had yielded to them. Wherefore it happened, that in the Council aſſembled at Conſtantinople, Nov. 448. to examine the Sentence given by Florentius Biſhop of Sardis, Metropolitan of the Province of Lydia againſt two † Biſhops ſubject to his Juriſdiction; Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum brought an Accuſation againſt Eutyches, and preſented his Petition to the Council Nov. 8. in which he requeſts, that Eutyches might be ſummoned before the Synod, to anſwer to ſuch Accuſations as he had to make againſt him; alledging, that he was ready to prove, that he held Heretical Opinions about the Myſtery of the Incarnation. This Petition being read in the Council, Flavian ſaid, That this Accuſation ſurprized him, but that Euſebius, Biſhop of Dorylæum, ought to go to Eutyches, and confer with him about his Doctrine; and if he found him Heretical in his Principles, then the Synod might cite him. Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum anſwered, That he was heretofore intimate with him, that he had admoniſhed him ſeveral times, but could not work any change in him. Flavian urged him ſeveral times to ſpeak with him again, but he would do nothing, but more importun'd them to cite Eutyches. Whereupon the Council ordered, that he ſhould be ſummoned; and they ſent John a Prieſt and Advocate, and Andrew a Deacon to communicate to him the Petition preſented againſt him; and to tell him, that he muſt come to the Council.

In the ſecond Action, which was on Nov. 12. Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum, to free himſelf from all Suſpicion of Neſtorianiſm, deſired that the two firſt Letters of St. Cyril to Neſtorius, and his Letter to John Biſhop of Antioch might be read. Flavian, Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum, and all the other Biſhops approved the Doctrine contained in their Letters, and the greateſt part of them added, that it was conformable to the Faith of the Nicene Council. Act. II.

In the third Action held Nov. 15. John and Andrew related to the Council, that they had been with Eutyches at his Monaſtery; that they had read to him the Petition preſented againſt him, and had given him a Copy of it, and had cited him before the Synod; but he anſwered them, That he had made a Reſolution a long time ago never to go out of his Monaſtery, but to abide in it as in a Tomb; that he prayed them to aſſure the Council, that Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum had been his Enemy a long time, and had invented this Accuſation to ruine him; that he was ready to conſent to the Confeſſion of Faith made by the Fathers aſſembled at Epheſus and Nice, and ſubſcribe their Expreſſions; but if they were miſtaken in any thing, he would not reprove it, nor did he intend to give his Approbation of it; that he did keep cloſe to the Scripture, as being more certain than the Explications of the Fathers; that after the Incarnation of the Word he did adore Jeſus Chriſt, as God incarnate and made Man; that he read a Book to them, where theſe things were, and afterwards rejected the Propoſitions of which he was accuſed, and among the reſt this, that the Word had brought his Fleſh from Heaven; that he owned, that he was perfect God, and perfect Man born of the Virgin, without having a Fleſh conſubſtantial with ours; and that he was made up of two Natures Hypoſtatically united. This Relation of John and Andrew was confirmed by the Teſtimony of one Athanaſius of Seleucia. Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum ſaid to the Council, That what he had already related was ſufficient to diſcover the Opinion of Eutyches, but he again intreated the Synod to cite him a ſecond time. They ſent therefore to him two Prieſts, named Mamas and Theophilus, giving them an Order in Writing directed to Eutyches in the name of the Synod, Act. III.

in which he was commanded to come and defend himſelf againſt the Accuſations of Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum; and they threatned him, if he did not come, to judge him according to the Severity of the Canons, as a Perſon, who was afraid to be convicted, and therefore fled from Juſtice, becauſe the Excuſe which he alledged, that he had reſolved not to go out of his Monaſtery, was not ſufficient, the Accuſation being of that Nature. After the departure of the Prieſts, who carried this Order to Eutyches, Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum ſaid, that this Monk did all he could to make Trouble; that he had ſent into all the Monaſteries a Form of Faith to have it ſigned there: Abraamius the Prieſt depoſed, that Aſterius told him, that the Abbot Immanuel had received one in the name of Eutyches, and becauſe he aſſured them, that he alſo had ſent it to other Monaſteries, they nominated two Prieſts and two Deacons to go and get a true Information of it in all the Monaſteries. Mamas and Theophilus, whom they had ſent to Eutyches, being returned, reported, that being arrived at his Monaſtery, they found the Monks at the Gate, and that they told them, that they came to ſpeak with their Abbot, that as the Deputies of his Biſhop and of the Synod they deſired to ſpeak with him; but the Monks anſwered, that he was ſick; that he could not ſpeak with them; and that they might tell them the Occaſion of their coming, and what they deſired of him; that they inſiſted upon it, that they muſt ſpeak with him in Perſon, and that they had a Letter from the Synod directed to him; that theſe Monks being gone in, ſent out another Monk, called Eleuſinius, who told them, that he was come to them inſtead of their Abbot, who was ſick; that they had inſiſted and demanded, whether Eutyches would receive them or not? that theſe Words much affrighted theſe Monks; but to pacifie them, they bid them not trouble themſelves, for they brought nothing that need diſturb them, but could tell them the Subject of the Letter of the Synod, was to cite him a ſecond time, that he ſhould come and give Anſwer to the Accuſation brought againſt him by Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum; that the Monks entring in again told Eutyches of it, who immediately cauſed them to be brought in; that they delivered their Summons to him from the Synod, and that after he had read it, he told them, that he had made a ſolemn Reſolution a long time ſince never to go out of his Monaſtery; that they ſtill urged him to yield Obedience to the Synod, but he always refuſed it, and had given them a Writing ſubſcribed by his own Hand to preſent to the Council. They ordered him to be cited the third time the next Day, which was Octob. 17. and framed the Inſtrument of his Citation, which they gave to Memnon * the Sacriſtan, and two Deacons to deliver it to him.

Act. IV.

The next day Eutyches ſent Abraamius the Prieſt with three Deacons belonging to his Monaſtery to Flavian, to excuſe his not coming to the Council by reaſon of his Sickneſs. Flavian hearing this Excuſe, ſaid it was reaſonable to put off this buſineſs till he was well. Abraamius telling them, that he had a Commiſſion to anſwer for him, if they did put any Queſtions to him. Flavian replied, that the Perſon accuſed ought to anſwer for himſelf; that he did not urge him; that he would give him all the time he deſired; that he might be aſſured, that he ſhould find all the Biſhops of this Synod to be his Brethren and Friends; that ſeveral Perſons had taken Offence at the things that Eutyches had vented; that he ought to clear himſelf of the Accuſation, or make Satisfaction for it; that he had heretofore been a ſtout Champion for the Truth againſt Neſtorius; that it was neceſſary that he ſhould ſpeak for himſelf; and if he hath delivered any Error, he ought not to be aſhamed to retract it; that if he owned it and would condemn it, the Synod was ready to forgive him, upon Condition that he would never teach the like for the future; in ſum, that he had known him a long time, and had a great reſpect for him, but could not but hearken to ſo zealous an Accuſer; that he had deſired him ſeveral times to lay down this Accuſation, but could not prevail; that he deſired not the Deſtruction of the Monaſteries; that he wiſhed for nothing ſo much as to preſerve Peace and Union. This Conference is reckoned for the fourth Act of the Council: Nevertheleſs, it was not with all the Aſſembly of Biſhops, but only between Flavian, and the Meſſengers from Eutyches.

The Councils.

Act. V.

The next Day being Wedneſday, Nov. 17. the Biſhops being again met, Memnon, who had been ſent by the Council to ſummon Eutyches a third time, ſaid, that he had anſwered him; that he had ſent Abraamius to Flavian and the Synod, to * conſent in his Name to all that had been decreed by the holy Fathers aſſembled at Nice and Epheſus, and to all that St. Cyril had ſpoken. Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum anſwered, that that was not the Queſtion, whether he conſented to them now or no, but what he had done heretofore? that he was accuſed for having taught Heretical Doctrines; that he had Witneſſes of it; that he had admoniſhed him of it ſeveral times; that 'tis not ſufficient for him now to ſay, that he approves found Doctrine; that he ought to be convicted of the Errors he hath taught, and afterwards retract them, and give full Satisfaction. Memnon added to his Relation, that having urged Eutyches to come himſelf, he ſaid, that he had ſent Abraamius to obtain ſome time of Flavian and the Synod; that he expected their Anſwers, and deſired only the reſt of the Week; that on Monday next he would come to the Synod and give them Satisfaction. This Report being confirmed by the other Deputies, they gave Audience to thoſe whom they had ſent to the Monaſteries, to enquire whether Eutyches had ſent any Forms of Faith to be ſigned by them; and they ſaid, that the Abbots Martin and Fauſtus had received a Writing in Eutyches's Name, but they would not ſubſcribe it; that the Abbot Job had heard that the Biſhop of Conſtantinople would ſoon bring them one to ſign; that Immanuel and Abraamius had received no Writing in Eutyches's Name. Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum inſiſted, that they had enough to condemn Eutyches, but nevertheleſs conſented, that he ſhould be allowed the time he deſired, and defer his Judgment to Monday, November 24.

In the mean time he laboured to get all things ready for his buſineſs; and in the Synod held on Saturday Nov. 22. he deſired them to ſummon ſuch Perſons before the Council as were neceſſary for the Conviction of Eutyches, viz. Narſes the Prieſt, and his Coadjutor, the Abbot Maximus his Friend, Conſtantinus a Deacon, and Eutyches's Chancellor, and Eleuſinius a Deacon of his Monaſtery, that the truth might be laid open before them. And they gave Euſebius leave to ſummon them. Afterward he ſhewed, that Mamas and Theophilus had not given a faithful Report of what they had heard Eutyches ſay, and requeſted, that they be obliged to ſpeak the Truth of what they heard upon Oath. Mamas was abſent, but Theophilus was there, and owned, that Eutyches had asked them in the Preſence of Narſes, Maximus, and other Monks, in what place of Scripture the two Natures were ſpoken of; who of the Fathers had ſaid, That the Word of God had two Natures; that they had anſwered, Shew us in what place of Scripture the Term Conſubſtantial is mentioned; that he anſwered them, That it was not in Scripture but in the Expoſitions of Faith made by the Fathers; That Mamas replied, That the holy Fathers alſo had acknowledged the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt; that continuing his Speech he enquired of Eutyches whether Jeſus Chriſt were perfect God and perfect Man; that he owned it; whereupon he concluded that Jeſus Chriſt was made up of two perfect Natures; But Eutyches anſwered them, God forbid that I ſhould ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt is made up of two Natures, or that I ſhould give the Godhead the Name of a Nature. Let them depoſe me if they pleaſe, yet I will die in the Faith which I have received from my Fathers. Then Theophilus excuſed himſelf for not relating theſe things at firſt, becauſe he was not ſent upon that Account, but to ſummon Eutyches only. Mamas being alſo ſuddenly returned, excuſed himſelf alſo after the ſame manner, and ſaid, that what Theophilus had depoſed was true.

Act VII. The Day on which Eutyches had promiſed to be preſent at the Council, being come, Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum firſt appeared. Then they ſent to ſearch for Eutyches in the Church, and about the Biſhop's Palace, and after much enquiry John a Prieſt and Advocate of the Church, came to tell them, that he had met with a Troop of Soldiers, Monks, and Guards, that would not ſuffer him to eſcape their hands, but upon condition that he would go with them; that there was the Grand Silentiary of the Palace, who demanded entrance, as coming from the Emperor. They ſuffered him to come in immediately with Eutyches, and he delivered to the Council the Emperor's Letter, which imported, that his Majeſty, deſirous to uphold the Peace of the Church, and the Faith of the Nicene Council, which was confirmed at Epheſus by the Biſhops who condemned Neſtorius, and to hinder any Scandal from riſing in the Church of Jeſus Chriſt, had nominated Florentius Patricius, who was a Perſon of known Faith and Honeſty, to be preſent at the Synod, becauſe they debated upon a matter of Faith; while the Letter was reading, there were ſeveral Acclamations made in the Praiſe of the Emperor. The Council teſtified their Approbation of the Emperor's Choice in naming Florentius, and were well pleaſed he ſhould be at the Council. They asked Eutyches whether he was willing with it, who anſwered, that he would agree to any thing that pleaſed the Council, and that he left himſelf entirely to the Biſhops. They prayed the Grand Silentiary to put Florentius in mind of it, and when he was come, they read over again the Acts of the Council. When they came to a place of Saint Cyril, where it was ſaid, that there is an Union of the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum interrupted them, and told them, that Eutyches did not conſent to that truth. Florentius deſired that Eutyches might be interrogated about it, but Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum fearing that he would own it, deſired them to make an end of reading the Acts, and ſaid, that it ought not to be any prejudice to him, although he ſhould now acknowledge this truth, ſince it is evident, that he hath denied it. He diſcovered, that he was afraid of him, and that with reaſon, becauſe he was Poor and of no Credit, whereas Eutyches was Rich and in great Credit, and had threatned him to cauſe him to be baniſhed to Oaſis. Flavian promiſing him faithfully that Eutyches's Confeſſion ſhould be no diſadvantage to him; Euſebius then asked him, if he confeſſed the Union of the two Natures. Eutyches ſaid Yea. Euſebius preſſed him further, and asked him, if he acknowledged two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt after the Incarnation, and whether he owned that Jeſus Chriſt was of the ſame ſubſtance with other Men according to the Fleſh. Eutyches anſwered, that he came not to diſpute, but to deliver his Judgment which was ſet down in the Paper, which was in his Hand, which he intreated them to read. Flavian bid him read it himſelf, and becauſe he ſaid he could not, they bid him declare his Opinion with his Mouth. Wherefore he ſaid, that he worſhipped the Father as the Son, and the Son as the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt as the Father and the Son; that he acknowledged that he dwelt with us in the Fleſh, having taken Fleſh of the Virgin, and he was really Incarnate for our Salvation. Flavian asked him, if he believed that Jeſus Chriſt was con-ſubſtantial with the Father according to his Divinity, and with us according to his Humanity. Eutyches anſwered, that he had delivered his Judgment, and they need not ask him farther about it. Flavian demanded if he agreed, that Jeſus Chriſt was of two Natures. He anſwered, that he would not diſpute about the Nature of his Maſter and Lord. Flavian further asked him, if he believed him of the ſame Subſtance with us, according to the Humanity. He replyed, that hitherto he had never aſſerted that the body of Jeſus Chriſt was of the ſame Subſtance with ours, but that the Virgin's was. But becauſe they urged him further, ſhewing him, that if the body of the Virgin was of the ſame Subſtance with ours, and Jeſus Chriſt aſſumed his body of the Virgin, the body of Jeſus Chriſt was alſo of the ſame Subſtance with ours. He anſwered, that ſince others affirmed it, he was very willing to aſſert it, but hitherto he had called it the body of God. Laſtly, Florentius bid him ſpeak plainly, whether Jeſus Chriſt after the Incarnation was of two Natures? he anſwered boldly, that before the Union there were two Natures, but after the Union he acknowledged but one. The Synod required him to curſe this Doctrine. He anſwered, that he would be willing to ſubmit to the Judgment of the Council, but he could not curſe the contrary Opinion, becauſe if he did it he ſhould curſe the Holy Fathers. They urged him to pronounce them Accurſed, who would acknowledge but one Nature in Jeſus Chriſt after the Incarnation, but he ſtoutly maintain'd that he would not do it, becauſe it was the judgment of St. Cyril and St. Athanaſius. When they ſaw, that he ſtuck at this, the Synod pronounced him deprived of his Prieſt-hood, of the Communion of the Church, and the Office of Abbot; and ordered, that all thoſe, who ſhould accompany with him, and aſſemble with him, ſhould be excommunicated, as well as thoſe who ſhould eſpouſe his Sentiments. This Sentence was ſigned by 29 Biſhops, and 24 Abbots.

The Councils.

Eutyches having heard this Sentence pronounced againſt him thought it beſt to appeal to a Council, where the Patriarchs of Rome, Alexandria, and Jeruſalem, the Biſhop of Theſſalonica, and ſeveral other Biſhops ſhould be preſent. But he did not make this Appeal publickly, and in the preſence of the Synod; but the Aſſembly being diſſolved, and after the Sentence pronounced againſt him, he wrote immediately to Pope Leo, that Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum having a deſign to ruine him, and to diſturb the Church, had preſented a Petition to Flavian, and ſome other Biſhops who were met at Conſtantinople, in which he accuſed him for being an Heretick; that being ſummoned to anſwer to the Accuſation, although his Age and Sickneſs ought to have excuſed him, yet he had been forced to appear, knowing well enough that they had combined together to deſtroy him; that he had immediately preſented a Confeſſion of his Faith in Writing, ſubſcribed with his own hand; that Flavian had not, nor would receive it, nor cauſe it to be read, but had urged him to confeſs, that there were two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, and to pronounce them Accurſed that would not; that being unwilling to add any thing to the Faith of the Council of Nice, and knowing that Julius, Felix, St. Athanaſius, and St. Gregory rejected the two Natures, he dared not to diſcourſe of the Nature of the Word of God, who in the laſt days came down into the Womb of the Virgin without any change in himſelf, in ſuch manner as he pleaſed, and that he knew, that he was not a Man in ſhow only; that he would not curſe the Fathers, and that he had required them to write to his Holineſs, and leave it to him to judge him, promiſing to ſubmit to his Determination; that the Synod not regarding theſe Propoſitions had diſſolved themſelves, and had publiſhed a Sentence of Depoſition againſt him; that they had contrived a long time againſt him by the Faction, inſomuch that he was in great danger, if he had not been taken away by the Guards; that they had forced all the Abbots to ſubſcribe againſt him, and being deſirous to juſtifie himſelf before the People by reciting his Creed, they had hinder'd him, that they might make him paſs altogether for an Heretick; that in this condition he fled to St. Leo for help, whom he knew to be Zealous for the Faith, and to hate all Faction and Conteſt; that he aſſured him, that he brought in no Innovations concerning the Faith, and had been taught from the beginning of the Church; that he condemned Apollinaris, Valentinus, Manes, Neſtorius, and all thoſe who affirm, that the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt deſcended from Heaven, and was not aſſumed in the Womb of the Virgin. He requeſts, that ſetting aſide that which had been done againſt him through Faction and Combination, that it be not prejudicial to him, St. Leo would give his Judgment about the point of Doctrine in conteſt; that he would forbid them for the future to ſpeak abuſively of him, to thruſt him out of the number of the Orthodox, and that he would not endure that a Perſon who hath paſſed 70 Years in the exerciſe of Continence and Chaſtity, be overwhelmed at the end of his Life. He annexed to the end of this Letter the Petition of Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum, and the Confeſſion of Faith which he had made in the Council, with the Teſtimonies of the Holy Fathers againſt the two Natures. There is alſo at the end of this Letter a Confeſſion of Faith made by Eutyches, in which he profeſſes to hold to the Definitions of the Councils of Epheſus and Nice, of St. Cyril and other Fathers of the Church, and pronounce Anathema againſt Neſtorius and Apollinaris, and againſt all thoſe who affirm, that the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt came down from Heaven, holding that the Word of God came down from Heaven without Fleſh and took Fleſh in the Womb of the Virgin of the very Fleſh of the Virgin. So that he, that from Eternity was perfect God, is become perfect Man in time. We find alſo in the ſame place a Letter attributed to Julius, which affirms, that we ought not to ſay, that there are two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt after their Union, and that as Man, although he be made up of a Soul and a Body, he is but one Nature, in like manner though the Divinity and Humanity be in Jeſus Chriſt, they are nevertheleſs but one Nature. It is probable, that this Letter is forged under the Name of Julius, as the Letters attributed to Felix, and St. Athanaſius upon the ſame ſubject.

The ſecond Synod of Conſtantinople.

But Eutyches did not content himſelf to write to the Pope: He beſought the Emperor to call a General Council for the determination of his Cauſe, and prayed him, that in the mean while he would have the Acts of the Judgment given againſt him by Flavian to be reviewed, maintaining that things were not carried as they are related in thoſe Acts. From this time the Emperor reſolved to aſſemble a General Council, and in the mean while he aſſembled the Biſhops reſiding in Conſtantinople, to examine the Acts of the Council under Flavian before them and the Parties concerned. This Synod met Apr. 1. in the Baptiſtery of the Great Church. It conſiſted of 30 Biſhops out of the Dioceſes of Aſia, Pontus, the Eaſt, and Thracia, of whom 10 or 12 were preſent at the former Synod. Thelaſius Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia was the firſt. Patricius Florentius held the chief place in it as Judge, and the Tribune Macedonius, a Notary, and Maſter of Requeſts ordered it. He, when the Biſhops were entred, ordered, that thoſe, who were ſent in the ſtead of Eutyches ſhould be admitted. Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum ſaid, that if he defended himſelf by Proxie, he would retire. Macedonius having anſwered, that the Emperor would have it ſo, Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum deſired the Biſhops to declare, if they were willing it ſhould be ſo. Melipthongus Biſhop of Juliopolis ſaid, that he thought that the Perſon accuſed ought to come in Perſon, eſpecially if the Cauſe in Examination were of any conſequence, and that the Emperor had determined to hold an Univerſal Council, to which all matters of conſequence ought to be reſerved. Macedonius having been inquired of by Florentius, what commands he had received from the Emperor about it, ſaid, that the Emperor underſtanding that Eutyches was condemned, would have the Acts of his Condemnation read over, in the preſence of thoſe whom Eutyches had ſent in his ſtead to the Synod, that both Parties might be ſatisfied in what was related. Patricius hereupon called in Conſtantinus, Eleuſinius, and Conſtantius, who were ſent on Eutyches's behalf, and Macedonius having placed the Goſpel in the middle of the Synod, would have obliged the Biſhops to take an Oath, that they would ſpeak truly, if things were tranſacted ſo as they are ſet down in the Acts. But Baſilius Biſhop of Seleucia ſaid, that the Biſhops were never obliged to take an Oath upon the like Occaſion, that Jeſus Chriſt forbids us to ſwear, that being before the Altars, having the fear of God before their Eyes, and their Conſcience to obſerve them, they would ſpeak the whole truth ſo far as they could remember. Wherefore they ordered Aetius a Deacon and Notary, to produce the Authentick Acts; at firſt he was unwilling, but Flavian and the Biſhops having conſented to it, he brought them forth; Conſtantius the Monk produced alſo a Copy of theirs. There was no difficulty about the two firſt Actions. They made ſeveral brangles about the Anſwers of Eutyches, which don't deſerve to be related. But when they came to the Condemnation, Conſtantine ſaid, that Eutyches had appealed to a Council of the Biſhops of Rome, Alexandria, Jeruſalem, and Theſſalonica, and that they had not inſerted that Appeal into their Acts. Baſil Biſhop of Seleucia ſaid, that he had heard him ſay at that time, that they propounded it to him to confeſs that there were two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt; that if the Biſhops of Rome and Alexandria would command him to do it, he would ſay it: but he never heard him appeal from the Sentence. Flavian maintained, that Eutyches had not appealed in the Council, but the Synod being diſſolved, as he aſcended on high, Patricius had told him, that Eutyches did appeal from it. Florentius ſaid, that the buſineſs was thus carried. Julianus and Seleucius teſtified, that none of the Biſhops had heard that he appealed from it.

The Council.

Eutyches invented another trick to weaken the Authority of the Acts. He deſired, that the Grand Silentiary might hear them, who being ſent to Flavian's Synod, might know much of what paſſed there. The Emperor granted his requeſt, and commanded the Grand Silentiary to take the depoſition of Martial, a Count, and Great Maſter of the Imperial Palace. He appeared before him with Macedonius the Notary, and Maſter of Requeſts Apr. 27. and declared, that being ſent to meet Flavian by the Emperor, to tell him, that Patricius Florentius had Commiſſion to ſit in the Synod, that he held in his Epiſcopal Palace at Conſtantinople; Flavian anſwered, that it was needleſs for Florentius to give himſelf that trouble, becauſe the buſineſs was already decreed, and Eutyches was condemned becauſe he did not appear after the ſecond Citation, and that then they ſhewed him a Paper, where his Condemnation was written; and that before the Synod was aſſembled, Macedonius depoſed, that being come from the Council where they had reviewed the Acts of the Synod, Aſterius, a Prieſt and Notary, met him, and told him, that Abraamius and the Notaries had changed ſome places in the Acts; and fearing leſt they ſhould diſcover the fraud, he was forced to tell him, that it was done without his knowledge or conſent.

It was about this time that Flavian was obliged to make a Confeſſion of his Faith to the Emperor, which is recited in the firſt part of this Council, in which he profeſſes to follow the Holy Scripture, and Expoſitions of Faith, made by the Holy Fathers aſſembled at the Council of Nice, of the 125 Fathers aſſembled at Conſtantinople, and thoſe who aſſembled at Epheſus under St. Cyril, and to teach that there is but one Jeſus Chriſt born of God from all Eternity, according to his Divine Nature, and born of the Virgin in time according to his Humane, perfect God, and perfect Man, made up of a Soul and Body of the ſame Subſtance with God, as to his Divine Nature, and with his Mother, according to the Fleſh, made up of two Natures united in one Perſon. That he doth not refuse to say, that there is one Nature of the Word, provided that it be acknowledged to be Incarnate and made Man, because our Lord Jesus Christ is of two Natures. That he pronounces them accursed, that affirm, that there are two Sons, or two Persons, and particularly Nestorius. This was the Substance of the Form of Faith, signed by Flavian, and presented to confute the Calumnies of those who hated and envied him. C. 5.

St. Leo having received a Petition from Eutyches, and a Letter from the Emperor, wrote a Letter to Flavian, in which he tells him, that he greatly wondered that he had not written to him about the disturbance that happened in his Church, nor had given him an Account of what had passed; that he had received a Petition from Eutyches, who complained, that he was unjustly deprived of Communion notwithstanding the Appeal, which he interposed in the Council; but they had no regard to it; that he saw not with what Justice they could condemn him, yet he desired nothing to be done, till he had full information of every thing; that they ought to have shewed some Innovation that Eutyches had made against the Ancient Doctrine, for which he deserved to be dealt so rigorously with; that he had sent him a Person of Credit, and a faithful Relation of what had passed, because the Lenity of the Church, and the Piety of the Emperor, inclined him to wish earnestly for Peace, and to induce them that are in an Error to acknowledge it, and amend it; that he did not think it a very hard thing to compose things, because Eutyches had already declared, that he was ready to recant, if he was found to have taught any Error. This Letter bears date Febr. 18. An. 449. Ep. 20. Act of the Counc. c. 2.

At the same time he wrote also a Letter to Theodosius, in which having highly extolled the Emperor's Piety, he tells him, that he had not yet been able to learn for what Reason Flavian had condemned Eutyches; that he had received a Writing from Eutyches, in which he complained, that he had been unjustly condemned, although he had never departed from the Faith of the Council of Nice; that the Petition of Eusebius Bishop of Dorylæum, of which Eutyches had sent him a Copy, had not given him a sufficient insight into it, because he had not distinctly set down the thing which he reproved in his Doctrine; that he had written to Flavian to send a full and faithful Relation of the Affair, and he made no question but that he would do it. Ep. 21. in the Acts of the Council, c. 3.

We have two Letters of Flavian to St. Leo. In the first, which he wrote to him when he sent him the Acts of the Council of Constantinople, he accuses Eutyches for reviving the Errors of Valentinus, and Marcion, by holding that there is but one Nature in Jesus Christ; that the Properties of the two Natures were mixed together, and that the Flesh of our Lord Jesus Christ was not of the same substance with ours; that Eutyches had been accused by Eusebius Bishop of Dorylæum, and was convicted of this Error, as he may learn by the Acts annexed to this Letter; that since Eutyches, instead of Repenting, had disturbed the Church by Publishing abusive Libels, and Presenting to the Emperor arrogant Petitions, full of Falshoods, and Injuries breaking all Laws by it; that it was not true that he had presented an Appeal to the Council, as he told him, to deceive him; that he prayed him to act upon this occasion as became his Priestly Dignity, to make this business, which concerns all the Churches, his own, to approve the Condemnation of Eutyches so regularly performed, to confirm the Pious Inclinations of the Emperor, and so much the more, because this Affair needs nothing but his Help and Protection; that by this means Peace may soon be restored, Troubles cease, and he lay aside the thoughts of a Council, which he is about to convene, which can only bring further trouble to the Church. Act. II. Counc. IV. 1. Part, after Ep. 20. of St. Leo, & t. 1 Monum. Eccl. Græc. p. 50.

In the 2*d* Written some time after, having shewed what grief he was in for the Impiety of Eutyches, he accuses him of the Errors of which he had spoken in the first, and prays St. Leo to make known his Condemnation to all the Bishops subject to the See of Rome, for fear lest any one not being informed of it, should write to him, or communicate with him. Acts of the Council, p. 1. c. 6. The Councils.

St. Leo having received the first of these two Letters from Flavian, tells him that he commended the Zeal which he had shewn for the Faith, and that he would not suffer him to be troubled, nor Eutyches to persist in his Impiety. This Letter is dated May 21. 449. He was of the Opinion at first, as well as Flavian, That it was not necessary to assemble a General Council, at least in the East, and to prevent it prayed Theodosius to call one in Italy. But before the Emperor had received this Letter, he had appointed a Council at the humble request of Dioscorus Bishop of Alexandria, for the Re-examination of the business of Eutyches. S. Leo having notice of it, and being Summoned to it, as other Bishops were, nominated 3 Legates to send into the East, Julius Bishop of Puteoli, Renatus a Priest and Hilarius a Deacon, with Dulcitius a Notary; he gave them several Letters, which are Dated June 13. Ep. 22. Ep. 23.

The first was that famous Letter directed to Flavian, in which he explains with so much Accuracy the Mystery of the Incarnation. In it he distinguishes two Births of the Son of God, and two Natures in Jesus Christ, whose Properties subsist distinctly, although they be united in one and the same Person. He maintains that the Word hath assumed our Nature, and all the Properties of it, Sin only excepted. In it he proves that he hath a true Flesh like ours. He rejects the Confession of Faith made by Eutyches, because, says he, 'tis absurd to say, That the Son in the Incarnation is of two Natures, and impious to maintain, That after the Incarnation he hath but one. He acknowledges that he was justly Condemned, and yet was willing to shew him some Mercy if he would confess his fault, and condemn viva voce, and in Writing the Errors which he had published. Ep. 24.

The second was written to Julian Bishop of Coos, who had been present at the Judgment given against Eutyches, and had written about it to S. Leo. In it he speaks passionately against Eutyches, calling him an Impudent Old Man; he accuses him for reviving the Errors of Valentinus, Apollinaris, and Manichæus. He proves that there is no change, nor a confusion made in the two Natures in Jesus Christ. He observes, that it follows from Eutyches's Confession of Faith, that the Soul of Jesus Christ was united with the Godhead before it assumed a Body in the Womb of the Virgin Mary, and that the Body of Jesus Christ was created out of Nothing. Lastly, He maintains against Eutyches, That although Jesus Christ had some particular Privileges, as to be Born, and Conceived of a Virgin by the Power of the Holy Ghost, and not to be subject to the motions of Concupiscence, nor Sin, yet he hath a Body and Soul of the same Nature with ours, and endued with the same Properties. Ep. 25.

The third is directed to Theodosius. He tells him, That he had sent his Legates to be present at the Council in his stead, which he had called at Ephesus, and assure him at the same time, that Eutyches was apparently in an Error. Ep. 26.

The fourth Letter of the same Date is directed to the Empress Pulcheria. He commendeth her Zeal for the defence of the Faith; explains the Mystery of the Incarnation to her; condemns the obstinacy of Eutyches; complains that the Emperor had appointed the Council upon a day too near, because the Bishops of Italy had too little time from the 12*th.* of May, on which they received the News of it, to the 1*st.* of August, which was the day appointed for the Meeting of the Synod at Ephesus, to prepare for, and finish such a Journey. That the Emperor had thought that he ought to be present in Person, but although he had had some Precedent for it, which he had not, the present Conjuncture will not permit Ep. 27.

him to leave Rome. Laſtly, He ſhews of what Importance this Queſtion was, and prays him to take care that Eutyches's Impiety be condemned by pardoning him if he recant it.

Ep. 28. The fifth Letter of St. Leo is directed to the Abbots of Conſtantinople; he tells them, that he condemns the Errors of Eutyches, and hoped that he would acknowledge it.

Ep. 29. The ſixth is directed to the Council it ſelf; In it he oppoſes Eutyches by the Confeſſion of St. Peter, who acknowledged that Jeſus Chriſt was the Chriſt the Son of the Living God. He exhorts the Fathers of the Council to ſuppreſs the Error, and to reduce thoſe that are in it.

Ep. 30, 31, 32, 33. There are alſo two Letters of the ſame date, of which one is addreſſed to Pulcheria, the other to Julian of Coos; as alſo another to Flavian, dated June 17, and another June 20, to Theodoſius. He repeats the ſame things in them.

The Emperor Theodoſius alſo wrote ſeveral Letters about the Council. The firſt is about the Calling of it, dated May 30, directed to the Patriarchs and Exarchs, in which he orders them to be at Epheſus, Aug. 1. with the Metropolitans, and ſo many of the Biſhops of their Juriſdiction as they would chooſe, except Theodoret, who was prohibited to come thither, unleſs the Council ſhould ſummon him.

The ſecond is a private Letter to Dioſcorus, dated May 15, in which he gives him Notice, that he would have the Abbot Barſumas preſent at the Council, as a Deputy for the Eaſtern Abbots, who complained that they were uſed hardly by their Biſhops, who were Favourers of Neſtorius's Party. The third is an Order to Barſumas to be preſent at the Council. It is dated the day before the former Letter.

The fourth is an Order directed to Elpidius to come to the Council with Eulogius, a Tribune and Notary, to prevent that there be no Tumults there. In it he orders that the Biſhops, who have been Judges of Eutyches, ſhould be preſent at it, but have no power to conſult, nor right to Vote, but ſhall wait upon the Judgment of the other Biſhops, becauſe they re-examine what they have judged. He forbids them to meddle with any Civil Affairs, leſt that which concerns the Faith be not throughly decided.

The fifth is an Order to the Proconſul of Aſia, to afford Elpidius all neceſſary Aſſiſtance. The ſixth is a Letter to the Biſhops of the Council, in which he tells them, that he wiſhed that they had had no cauſe of going from their Churches and leaving their Miniſterial Functions, and to ſpare themſelves the trouble of ſo long a Voyage, but Flavian having moved a Queſtion concerning the Faith, by accuſing the Abbot Eutyches, after he had done what he could to appeaſe the Conteſt, but to no purpoſe, by perſuading Flavian to keep cloſe to the Nicene Creed, he thought that there was no other way to decide this Queſtion but by aſſembling a Council, that they might examine all that had paſſed, utterly extirpate the Error, and expel all thoſe out of the Church who would revive the Hereſie of Neſtorius.

The ſeventh is a private Letter to Dioſcorus, in which he gives him the Precedence of the Biſhops, and the Chief Authority in the Council, not only upon the Account of Theodoret, whom he commanded to be excluded out of it, but upon the Account of ſome other Biſhops whom he ſuſpected to favour the Sentiments of Neſtorius. He takes notice alſo, that he was perſuaded that Juvenal, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and Thalaſſius, Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, and the other Orthodox Biſhops, would join with him; and he was unwilling, that they who would add or change any thing that had been eſtabliſhed at Nice or Epheſus, ſhould have any Authority in this Synod. It is eaſy to perceive by theſe Letters that the Court favoured Eutyches, and the Ægyptian Party, and declared it ſelf openly for them againſt Flavian and the Eaſtern Biſhops: It was Chryſaphius the Eunuch, who for a long time had born a good Affection to the Ægyptians, who was a great Friend to Eutyches, who baptized him, and a particular Enemy to Flavian, who would not give him Money for his Ordination. It was, I ſay, this Chryſaphius who had miſguided the Emperor's Piety, with whom he had a great Intereſt and Favour.

The Councils.

The Council began Aug. 8. An. 449. It was made up of 130 Biſhops out of the Dioceſes of Ægypt, the Eaſt Thracia, Pontus and Aſia: Dioſcorus of Alexandria was Preſident of it by the Emperor's Order. Flavian, Biſhop of Conſtantinople, appeared there in the Name of the Party; the Biſhop-Legate of the Pope, held the ſecond place in it. It is not certain whether it was Julian Biſhop of Coos, or Julius Biſhop of Puteoli, who held this place; the Greek Acts of the Council bear the Name of Julian, which is alſo met with in the ordinary Edition of the Latin Tranſlation, but the MSS. of the Old Tranſlation, reviewed by Ruſticus, read it Julius, and not Julianus. It is certain by St. Leo's Letters, that he ſent Julius, Biſhop of Puteoli, with Hilarius the Deacon, and Renatus the Prieſt, to ſupply his place in the Council: Now the Author of the Memoir about the Affair of Acacius aſſures us, that Renatus died in his Journey at the Iſle of Delos, and that Julius, Biſhop of Puteoli, aſſiſted in the Name of the Pope at the Council of Epheſus. Evagrius ſays alſo in his Hiſtory, that Julius, Biſhop of Puteoli, aſſiſted in the Pope's room at the Council of Epheſus. In the Acts of the Council there is no mention of Renatus the Prieſt, which confirms the Teſtimony of the Author of the Memoir about the Affair of Acacius, and proves, that it was he, and not Julius of Puteoli, that died in the way. It is true there is a Letter of Theodoret written after the Council to Renatus the Prieſt, but either Theodoret knew not of his Death, or the Superſcription is alter'd, for 'tis not probable that Hilarius the Deacon, and Dulcitius the Notary, ſhould be named in the Acts of the Council, and Renatus the Prieſt not be ſpoken of if he had been at it, and the Teſtimony of the Memoir of Acacius, who was almoſt contemporary, is of great weight. The Greek Text of the Acts of the Council ought not to create any doubts, for we know that the Greeks often corrupt the Latin Names, and the Name of Julian being more common among them than that of Julius, they put the firſt inſtead of the laſt. The MSS. of the Old Tranſlation in Latin, made when the Memory of the Council was yet freſh, and when the true Name of the Pope's Legate, who aſſiſted at this Council, was well known, ſerve to rectify the Greek Text. Juvenal had the third place in the Council before Domnus Biſhop of Antioch, who was allotted the fourth Seat. Flavian was reckoned in the fifth place, which was very extraordinary in the Council of Chalcedon. Stephen, Biſhop of Epheſus, was the ſixth in Order; and Thalaſſius, Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia was next to him, and was ranked among the Patriarchs, as we have ſeen in the Emperor's Letters to Dioſcorus.

The Council of Epheſus under Dioſcorus.

John, the Chief Notary, having declared to the Biſhops, That the Emperor had cauſed them to meet, to examine a Controverſie of Faith diſputed between Flavian and Eutyches, utterly to extirpate Hereſie, and to confirm the Faith Eſtabliſhed by the Fathers of the Council of Nice, and Explained by thoſe of the Council of Epheſus, read the Letter for the calling of the Council. Then the Biſhop-Legate made ſome Excuſes for S. Leo, that he did not come in Perſon to the Council, as he had been deſired by the Emperor, becauſe there was no Precedent that it had ever been done in any Council. He required them to receive and read his Letter, in which he explained the Doctrine of the Church. They did not read this Letter, but the Emperor's, and after ſeveral Acclamations, in which they commended the Councils of Nice and Epheſus, they called Eutyches before them, who preſented a Confeſſion of Faith, in which he recited the Nicene Creed, profeſſed to live and die without making any alteration in it, by changing, or adding to it; as alſo in the Doctrine of St. Cyril, approved by the Council of Epheſus.

In

The Councils.

In it he pronounced Anathema againſt Manes, Valentinus, Apollinaris, and Neſtorius, and againſt all Hereticks, beginning with Simon M. and particularly againſt thoſe who maintain that the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt came down from Heaven. Having read this Confeſſion of Faith, he complained, That though he was of this Judgment, yet Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum, had unjuſtly accuſed him before Flavian, and the other Biſhops, who were at Conſtantinople about their private Affairs; that he had preſented abuſive Petitions againſt him, in which he treated him as an Heretick, although he alledged no Proof of it; believing, that Flavian having cited him to the Council, would condemn him becauſe he did not appear. That when he appeared, Flavian would not ſuffer him to read his Confeſſion of Faith; and though he declared, That he had no other Sentiments than thoſe of the Fathers of the Council of Nice, and Epheſus, yet they read a Sentence of Condemnation given againſt him, not regarding the Appeal, which he interpoſed, and made to a General Council. That after this Condemnation Flavian had cauſed him to be accounted for an Heretick, and had made ſeveral Biſhops and Monks to ſubſcribe againſt him, although above all things he ought to have written to all the Biſhops to whoſe Judgment he had appealed; that ſeeing himſelf thus perſecuted, he had informed the Patriarchs, and Emperor, after what manner things had been carried, and had requeſted that the Proceedings of Flavian ſhould be examined in the Council. When Eutyches had thus ſpoken, Flavian requeſted that Euſebius, Biſhop of Dorylæum, his Accuſer, ſhould be called in, but Elpidius would not ſuffer him to be admitted, and ſaid, That he had done the Office of an Accuſer before the firſt Judge, and that now the Judges themſelves were to anſwer for the Judgment; that the Council was met to judge the Judges themſelves, and examine the Judgment which they had given, and not to furniſh out a new Accuſation; ſo that it was ſufficient to read over again the Acts of the Council of Conſtantinople. Juvenal, Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and ſeveral other Biſhops, were of that Opinion, but the Pope's Legates demanded that St. Leo's Letter ſhould be read before the Acts. Eutyches ſaid, that the Legates were ſuſpected by him, becauſe ever ſince their Arrival they had abode with Flavian, who received them Friends, and gave them Preſents; ſo that he deſired the Council, that if they demanded any unjuſt thing againſt him, it might not be prejudicial to him. Dioſcorus, Preſident of the Council, concluded, that the Acts of the Condemnation of Eutyches ſhould be read without more ado. They read them all along with the Acknowledgment that had been made of them at Conſtantinople. When theſe Acts were read, the Biſhops declared, That Eutyches having always profeſſed the Faith of the Fathers of the Council of Nice, and Epheſus, was Orthodox, and had been unjuſtly condemned.

The Monks of the Monaſtery of Eutyches afterwards preſented a Petition againſt Flavian, in which they complain, That this Biſhop having unjuſtly condemned their Abbot, becauſe he would not approve, as he had done, Errors contrary to the Faith of the Councils of Nice and Epheſus, had ſent Theodotus a Prieſt to them, who enjoined them not to obey their Abbot, to have no Society with him, and not permit him to have the Management of the Revenue of the Monaſtery; that the Altar, which Flavian himſelf had conſecrated for them ſix Months ſince, had remained without a Sacrament; that they were ſtill themſelves bound by that unjuſt Sentence; that ſome of their Brethren were dead without receiving the Sacrament; that they had always ſtrictly followed the Orders of a Monaſtick Life according to their Rule, but had been deprived of their Sacraments; that they had paſſed the Feſtivals of the Nativity, Epiphany, and Eaſter, and continued 9 Months in that Eſtate, but Flavian had no Mercy on them; that they prayed the Synod to have ſome pity on their Miſery, reſtore them to the Communion, and to judge him with rigor who had paſſed that unjuſt Sentence upon them. This Petition was ſubſcribed by 1 Prieſt, 10 Deacons, 3 Sub-deacons, and 21 ordinary Monks. They queſtioned them about their Faith, who anſwering, That they received the Faith of the Councils of Nice and Epheſus, the Faith of St. Athanaſius, St. Gregory, and St. Cyril, and that they agreed to the Confeſſion of Faith that Eutyches had read, they declared them abſolved, and they received them to Communion.

The Councils.

Laſtly, They read the ſixth Action of the [former] Council of Epheſus, that they might get a pretence to condemn Flavian, and when it was read, and approved by the Biſhops, Dioſcorus declared, That Flavian, and Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum, having been the Cauſe of an univerſal Scandal, endeavouring to add to the Faith of the Council of Nice, contrary to the Prohibition of the Council of Epheſus, ought to be depoſed. His Opinion was followed by Juvenal, Domnus, Thalaſſius, and the Biſhops, who ſigned the Condemnation of Flavian, and Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum. While Dioſcorus gave his Judgment, Flavian ſaid aloud, that he rejected him; and Hilary the Deacon ſaid, that he oppoſed the Sentence of Dioſcorus. Some of the Biſhops contradicted it, others caſt themſelves at Dioſcorus's Feet, begging of him to ſpare Flavian, but they were compelled by the Threats of the Soldiers, whom they had admitted, to ſubſcribe the Acts of the Council. The next Day Dioſcorus depoſed Ibas Biſhop of Edeſſa, being accuſed of having ſpoken this Blaſphemy, That he envied not Jeſus Chriſt the Title of God, becauſe he could himſelf become ſuch, if he pleaſed. Nor did they ſpare Theodoret, although he was denied the Liberty of coming to defend himſelf. The Reaſon of his Condemnation was, that he had written againſt St. Cyril's Chapters, and had heretofore taken Neſtorius's part. Libinianus though Biſhop of Paros, was alſo depoſed; and laſtly, tho' Domnus, Biſhop of Antioch, had ſigned the Condemnation of Flavian, and conſented to all that Dioſcorus deſired, yet he was alſo condemned under a Pretence, that he had heretofore written a Letter to Dioſcorus againſt St. Cyril's 12 Chapters. Dioſcorus made uſe of the Opportunity of his Abſence from the Council, upon the Account of ſome Indiſpoſition which took him ſuddenly. Flavian appealed from this Judgment given againſt him by the Synod. The Reaſons for his Appeal were theſe, That they would not hear his Defence; that Dioſcorus had been an abſolute Commander in it to order what he pleaſed; that all Things paſſed by Force and contrary to the Canons; that they had forced the Biſhops by Threats to ſubſcribe; that they would not read St. Leo's Letter; that no Regard was had to the Refuſal which he made againſt Dioſcorus, nor to the Oppoſition made by the Pope's Legates. This Appeal was preſented to the Pope's Legates, but it was referred to a general and free Council, and there to be proſecuted. This appears by the Letters and Carriage of St. Leo, who in Purſuit of this Appeal did not concern himſelf with the Judgment of Flavian's Cauſe before his own Tribunal, but importuned the Emperor to call a Council of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops, to make void the Judgment given at Epheſus againſt all ſorts of Juſtice and Equity. Dioſcorus, and thoſe of his Faction, being provoked by this Appeal, ſet upon Flavian with a deſign to baniſh him, and did it with ſo much Violence, that he died a little time after. 'Tis probable that having received ſeveral Blows on his Feet when he was apprehended, and afterward being hardly uſed in his Journey by thoſe that carried him into Baniſhment, he died a little after he came there of the ill Uſage and Blows he had received. Thus Liberatus and Evagrius relate his Death, and this ſhews, that it was not without Reaſon that Dioſcorus was accuſed in the Council of Chalcedon of having been the Cauſe of Flavian's Death, becauſe though he did not himſelf ſmite him, yet it was by his Order that he was ſo badly uſed. Anatolius was ordain'd in the Place of Flavian, Maximus of Domnus, Nonnus of Ibas, and Athanaſius of Sabanian. They ordained none in the Place of Theodoret Biſhop of Cyrus, and Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum, for they were only thruſt out of their Dioceſes. The firſt deſired Help of the Pope. They did not ſpare the very Legates of St. Leo, who were the only Perſons who ſhewed any Courage for the Defence of the Innocent. They were apprehended, but Hilary found out a Way of Eſcape, and having paſſed through many Dangers they got ſafe

Ep. 35. to Rome. During theſe Tranſactions, St. Leo was much perplexed about the Succeſs of this Affair. He knew that Eutyches was very conſiderable at Court, and that Dioſcorus and the Egyptian Biſhops favoured him, and was afraid that they would not have that Reſpect to his Letter and Legates that they ought. Flavian's Silence increaſed his Grief, and he could not but let him know it. As ſoon as he underſtood by Hilarius the Deacon how things went, he called a Council, and wrote to the Emperor Theodoſius in
Ep. 39. his own and Brethrens Name, That the Council, which he had cauſed to be held at Epheſus, had depraved the Purity of the Faith, and Diſcipline of the Church; that all things were carried according to the Humour of Dioſcorus, who had allowed the Biſhops no Liberty, and who had made them paſs a very unjuſt Sentence. He conjured his Majeſty by the Name of the Holy Trinity to leave all things in the ſame State that they were before the aſſembling of this Council, until he could call a Council of a greater number of Biſhops from all Parts of the World. He ſays, that all the Churches, and all the Weſtern Biſhops did implore him with Tears and Sighs, that ſince the Legates of the Holy See have oppoſed it, and Flavian preſented them with an Appeal, his Majeſty would call a General Council in Italy, which may either wholly remove or mitigate the Cauſes of the Diſcontent; inſomuch that there may remain no Scruples about the Faith, nor any Diviſion contrary to Charity, by ſummoning the Biſhops of the Eaſtern Provinces to this Council. He adds, that 'tis unavoidable after an Appeal put in, and alſo conformable to the Laws eſtabliſhed in the Council of Nice. They are the Canons of the Council of Sardica that he means, and uſes to ſhew, that in the Caſe of an Appeal a Synod ought to be called to examine the Cauſe already judged; and not to ſhew that he had

Laſtly, He exhorts the People and Clergy, and Abbots at Conſtantinople to be ſtill united with Flavian, and explains to them what they ought to believe concerning the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt, by rejecting the Sentiments of Eutyches. In fine, He brought it to paſs that the Emperor Valentinian, and the Empreſſes Placidia and Eudoxia did join with the Weſtern Biſhops to intreat Theodoſius to ſuffer a General Council to be held in Italy. We have the Letters they wrote to Theodoſius, in which they much extol the Authority of the Holy See, and inſiſt much upon Flavian's Appeal. But Theodoſius gave this Anſwer to theſe Letters,

St. Leo alſo wrote about it to Pulcheria, and made her write to him by the Empreſs Placidia. He refuſed to communicate with Anatolius, and renewed his Suit afreſh in the Beginning of the next Year, that he would hold a Council in Italy: He

So that the four Legates which St. Leo had ſent, being arrived at Conſtantinople, a little after the Death of Theodoſius, were very kindly received there. Anatolius foreſeeing that it would not be for his Advantage to continue in Communion with Dioſcorus, and maintain his Separation from St. Leo's, ſought all means to join with the Latter, and to procure, that he ſhould acknowledge him lawfully ordained, although it was done by Dioſcorus, and he had been put into the Place of a Biſhop unjuſtly, and violently depoſed. He made uſe of his Intereſt with the Emperor and Empreſs to bring this about, and that he might himſelf engage St. Leo's Favour, and perſuade him of the Purity of his Faith, he called a Council of ſuch Biſhops as were then at Conſtantinople, and invited the Pope's Legates to be preſent at it. In it he cauſed St. Leo's Letter to Flavian to be read, with the Teſtimonies of the Greek and Latin Fathers, and cauſed all the Biſhops to ſign it, pronounced Anathema againſt Neſtorius and Eutyches, and condemned their Doctrine, ſent the Letter of St. Leo to the Metropolitans, that they ſhould ſign it, and that they ſhould cauſe all the Biſhops of their Provinces to ſign it. In this Synod they alſo decreed that the Biſhops who were fallen into an Error by approving the Acts of the Council of Epheſus under Dioſcorus, and had ſeparated themſelves from the Communion of the Church, ſhould have Communion with no Church but their own, and be deprived of the Communion of other Biſhops. The Pope's Legates propoſed it to him to blot out the Names of Dioſcorus and Juvenal out of the Dypticks.

Anatolius having celebrated this Council ſent Deputies to St. Leo, to aſſure him of the Purity of his Doctrine, and communicated to him what they had propoſed in the Council. The Emperor Marcian, and the Empreſs Pulcheria, wrote to St. Leo, and ſhe tells him, That they intended ſoon to celebrate a Council in the Eaſt, and deſired him to ſend the Weſtern Biſhops to it. She adds that ſhe had cauſed the Body of Flavian to be brought to Conſtantinople, where they interr'd it honourably in the Apoſtles Church, which was the ordinary burying Place of the Biſhops of Conſtantinople, and had given thoſe Biſhops who were baniſhed upon the Account of the Council of Epheſus, leave to return to their own Dioceſes.

St. Leo thanked the Emperor and Empreſs for the Protection they had afforded to the Faith, he received Anatolius with Joy, acknowledged him for a lawful Biſhop, allowed him to receive thoſe Biſhops to the Communion of the Church, who being forced to give place to the Violence uſed in the Council of Epheſus, were ſorry for what they had done, and confeſſed the Faith of the Church. As to Dioſcorus, Juvenal, and Euſtathius Biſhop of Berytus, he bids Anatolius to conſult with his Legates about it, and to do as they ſhould judge convenient, provided it be not prejudicial to the Memory of Flavian: That as to himſelf he thought it unjuſt to put the Name of his Perſecutors among the number of the Biſhops of the Church, ſo long as they remain in their Error, and it ſeemed reaſonable to him either to puniſh them for their Perfidiouſneſs, or make them acknowledge their Fault. Laſtly, He recommends to him Julian of Coos, Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum, and thoſe of the Clergy, who have always been Favourers of Flavian. He wrote particularly to Julian Biſhop of Coos, that he ought not to receive thoſe Biſhops, who had aſſiſted at the Council of Epheſus under Dioſcorus, till they condemn what they have done, and that they ſhould puniſh thoſe who perſiſt in it. Theſe Letters are dated, April 13. 451.

the same mind as to the calling of a Synod, but St. Leo desired, that it might meet in Italy; but the Emperor peremptorily resolved it should be in the East. Nevertheless he sent Lucentius a Bishop, and Basil a Priest, into the East, to endeavour to reconcile the Bishops; but he wrote at the same time, that he thought it more convenient to put off the Council a while upon the Account of the Wars. He commanded his Legates to act warily, and with the Concurrence of Anatolius, and to receive none to their Communion but such as profess the Doctrine of the Church distinctly and plainly. As to the Heads of the Party, he meddles not with their Cause, but in the mean while he forbids them to recite their Name at the Altar, or receive them to Communion. He thanks the Emperor and Empress for restoring the exil'd Bishops, and honouring the Memory of Flavian, and prayed them to depose Eutyches, and put an Orthodox Abbot into his Monastery. Lastly, He advises Julian Bishop of Coos to join with his Legates in endeavouring to utterly extirpate the remainders of Heresie. Two Eastern Priests suspected of Heresie fled at the same time to Rome. The Pope being well assured of their Judgment, and having made them condemn the Errors of Nestorius and Eutyches, sent them back again absolved, and recommended them to Anatolius.

Ep. 67.

While St. Leo thought to restore the Affairs of the Church without a Council, Marcian appointed one at Nice, Sept. 1. St. Leo having received the News of it, sent Bonifacius a Priest to it, and gave order to Pascasinus Bishop of Lilybæum to go thither also in his Name with the Legates he had sent, and Julian Bishop of Coos. He wrote about the calling of this Council to the Emperor Anatolius, and Julian Bishop of Coos.

Ep. 69, 70, 71.

In these Letters he tells them that he was troubled, that they had appointed a Council, that he thought it better to defer it till some fitter time; yet he says, that he sends Pascasinus Bishop of Lilybæum, and Boniface the Priest, that they may assist in his stead at the Council with Julian Bishop of Coos. He desires likewise, that the Emperor would grant the Presidence to Pascasinus.

He also wrote a Letter to the Bishops of the Council, in which having excused himself, because he did not come to the Council by reason of the Custom, he tells them that he sent Pascasinus and Lucentius Bishops, and the Priests Boniface and Basil to assist in his Place at the Council. He exhorts them to suppress the Deputies of those, who oppose the Faith of the Incarnation, which he hath explained in his Letter to Flavian, and to redress the Grievances of the Church by restoring the Bishops condemned for the Faith, and by condemning Eutyches and his Followers, without mentioning what hath been done against Nestorius by the first Council of Ephesus. This Letter is dated June 27. There is also another of the same Date addressed to the Emperor Marcian, in which he observes, That the Council ought not to innovate any thing, nor bring any Question of Faith into Contest, but to keep themselves close to the Faith of the Councils of Nice and Ephesus, and condemn the Errors of Nestorius and Eutyches. By another Letter dated July 19. he desires the same thing of him, and recommends his Legates to him.

Ep. 73.

Ep. 75.

Lastly, He wrote to Pulcheria, that he had sent his Legates to the Council, although he wished that it had been held in Italy. He observes, That they ought to act in it with a great deal of Moderation, and not imitate the Violence used in the Council of Dioscorus. He adds, That he did so in receiving to Communion such, as having fallen through Cowardice had acknowledged their Fault. He thought likewise, that they ought to pardon the Heads of the Party, but he would not have them received rashly, without giving evident Signs of their sincere Repentance.

The first of September, which was the Day appointed for the beginning of the Council, being come, several Bishops came to Nice, where it was to sit. Having stayed there some days, and hearing nothing from the Emperor, they wrote to him to pray him to suffer the Council to begin; the Emperor returned them this Answer, That the Legates of the Holy See had thought it convenient, that he should be there in Person, and that his Affairs having not hitherto, nor yet permitting him to go to Ephesus, he desired them to come to Chalcedon, where they should hold the Council. This place was suspected by some, because it was to be feared, that Eutyches, who had a strong Party in those Quarters, would raise some Sedition. They discovered to the Emperor the ground of their Fear, but he assured them, that he would take care that they should have no Disturbance, and exhorted them to come immediately. The Bishops having received this Letter came cheerfully to Chalcedon, where the Council met the first time October. 8. Anno 451.

The Councils.

This Council was held in the Great Church of St. Euphemia, the Emperor's Commissioned-Officers, and the Counselors of State being present, who were to direct all their Motions, and were set in the middle of the Council, near the Rails of the Altar. On the Left-hand were the Bishops Pascasinus and Lucentius, and the Priest Boniface the Pope's Legate, then Anatolius Bishop of Constantinople, and after him Maximus Bishop of Antioch; Thalassius Bishop of Cæsarea, Stephen Bishop of Ephesus, and all the Bishops of the Eastern Dioceses, except those of Palestine with the Bishops of the Dioceses of Pontus, Asia, and Thrace, of which those that we have named, were Exarchs, or Patriarchs. Upon their Right-hand were Dioscorus Bishop of Alexandria, Juvenal Bishop of Jerusalem, Quintillus Bishop of Heraclea in Macedonia, who supplied the Place of the Bishop of Thessalonica, Peter Bishop of Corinth, with the Bishops of Egypt, Illyria and Palestine. The Holy Gospels were in the midst. The number of Bishops is commonly reckoned 630. And indeed, St. Leo in his 77th. Epistle to the French Bishops, saith, That the Synod consisted of 600 Bishops or thereabouts. Liberatus and Photius reckon 630, yet there are but 350, or thereabouts, named in the Acts of the Council, and 'tis very unlikely, that there should be above 600 Bishops assembled out of the Dioceses of the Greek Church. The Testimony of St. Leo doth not undoubtedly prove it, because the number of 600 in Latin is ordinarily taken for a considerable number. This might give some Reason for the Mistake, or there might be some confusion in the Figures. But however that be, 'tis certain that this Council was made up of a greater number of Bishops than any of the Precedent Councils.

The Council of Chalcedon.

The first Meeting of the Council was on the 8th. of October. The first thing that Pascasinus the Pope's Legate did, was to demand, that Dioscorus might not sit in the Council, saying, That they were ordered by St. Leo, Bishop of the Church of Rome, which is the Head of other Churches, to hinder him from sitting in the Council, and that if he did, they declared, that they would withdraw. We must observe, that they spoke in Latin, and an Interpreter explained what they said to the Council. The Commissioners asked them, what they had to object against him. The Legates insisted upon it, that he was to give an Account of the Judgment he had given without Authority, and contrary to the Will of the Holy See; that he was accused, and could not be a Judge. The Commissioners ordered him to come forth into the middle as a Person accused. Immediately his Accuser Eusebius Bishop of Doryleum appeared, and required that his Petition should be read: Saying with Tears in his Eyes, that he had been unjustly condemned as well as Flavian, whom Dioscorus had put to Death. The Sum of the Petition was this, that in the Council held a little while since at Ephesus, Dioscorus had attempted several things contrary to Justice, and the Faith, by upholding Eutyches, who was accused and condemned for Heresie, and by condemning the Orthodox Bishops; that he prayed the to command him to anſwer the Accuſations, which he was ready to prove againſt him. Dioſcorus made this Defence for himſelf, that Flavian had been condemned in a Council called by the Authority of the Emperor, and deſired them to read the Acts. Euſebius agreed to it. Dioſcorus changing his mind prayed the Council to examine before all things elſe, ſuch things as concerned the Faith. The Commiſſioners ordered, That he ſhould anſwer the Accuſations brought againſt him, and that the Acts of the Council ſhould be read as he had required. Whereupon they read the Emperor Theodoſius's Letter for the appointment of the Council of Epheſus, and the Acts of that Council, in which the Acts of the Council of Conſtantinople under Flavian were inſerted. This was the Cauſe of ſeveral Interruptions in the Council.

The firſt was about Theodoret, whom Theodoſius had forbidden to come to the Council of Epheſus. The Commiſſioners demanded that he ſhould be admitted, becauſe St. Leo had acknowledged him for a lawful Biſhop, and the Emperor Marcian had ordered him to be preſent at the Council. The Biſhops of Egypt, Illyria, and Paleſtine oppoſed it. Hereupon ſeveral tumultuous Acclamations were made of each ſide. Laſtly, the Judges ordered, that he ſhould come in as an Accuſer, and ſhould ſtand in the middle, provided, that it were not prejudicial to the Rights of either Party. When he entred, the Acclamations of both ſides were redoubled; Some cried out, that he was depoſed from his See, others accuſed him for being a Neſtorian. The Eaſtern Biſhops cried out againſt Dioſcorus, and the Egyptians and they againſt the Eaſtern Biſhops. This continued a long time, and the Synod had turned into a confuſed Rout, if the Commiſſioners had not ſuppreſſed the Popular Cries by telling the Biſhops, that it was unbecoming them to act thus, and then making them to go on in reading Theodoſius's Letters, and the Acts of the Council of Epheſus. The reading of theſe Papers diſcovered, that Dioſcorus would not ſuffer St. Leo's Letter to be read in the Synod, although it was twice requeſted of him. They accuſed Dioſcorus for having falſified the Acts, and made the Biſhops to ſign a blank Paper, and that by Force, compaſſing them in with Soldiers, who threatned them. They ſaid, that Eutyches had indeed owned that the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt did not come from Heaven, but that he would not ſay whence it was. They diſputed ſome time about the Union, and Diſtinction of the two Natures. The Eaſtern Biſhops confeſſed, that they had done ill in ſigning the Depoſition of Flavian, they ſaid unanimouſly, that they had all offended, and therefore deſired Pardon. They examined, why they would not ſuffer Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum to come into the Council of Epheſus. Whereupon Dioſcorus complained, that they had admitted Theodoret into the Council of Chalcedon. When they read the Judgment of Dioſcorus againſt Flavian, the Eaſtern Biſhops all cried out, Anathema to Dioſcorus, and diſapproved the Condemnation of Flavian, and Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum. The Commiſſioners concluded, that ſince it appeared by the Acts which they had read, and by the Confeſſion likewiſe of thoſe who had the chief Places in the Council of Epheſus, that Flavian and Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum had been unjuſtly condemned, it was juſt, that not only Dioſcorus Biſhop of Alexandria, but alſo Juvenal Biſhop of Jeruſalem, Thalaſſius Biſhop of Cæſarea, Euſebius Biſhop of Antyra, Euſtathius Biſhop of Berytus, and Baſil Biſhop of Seleucia in Iſauria, who had preſided in the Council of Epheſus with Authority, ſhould bear the ſame Puniſhment, and be declared unworthy of their Epiſcopal Office, according to the Holy Canons. The Biſhops of the Eaſt and Illyria, approved of this Sentence. The Judges then ſaid, that the Biſhops ought now to declare what their Faith is, and to be aſſured, that the Emperor followed the Faith of the Councils of Nice and Conſtantinople, the Doctrine of the Holy Fathers Gregory, Baſil, Athanaſius, Hilary, and the two Letters of St. Cyril, read and confirmed in the firſt Council of Epheſus; and that St. Leo had written a Letter to Flavian againſt Eutyches, which contained an Expoſition of the Catholick Faith.

The Councils.

The ſecond Action in the Greek Copies at preſent is that which treats of the Faith. Evagrius and Facundus make it the third, and put that which concerns the Depoſition of Dioſcorus in the ſecond place. Liberatus on the other hand follows the common order. The ancient MS. in the Church of Paris agrees with Evagrius; but Ruſticus the Deacon, who reviewed the ancient Tranſlation of the Council of Chalcedon by ſeveral MSS. about the middle of the fifth Age, aſſures us, that that in the Monaſtery of the Acæmetæ Monks follows the Order of Liberatus. So that if we conſider the Authorities of others it is hard to determine the Order of theſe two Acts, becauſe there are on both ſides Teſtimonies equally ancient and credible. The date, which might clear this difficulty, is not certain. The Act of the Condemnation of Dioſcorus is dated the third of the Ides, that is to ſay, the 13th. day of October. That wherein the Faith is treated of in the Greek, and moſt of the Latin MSS. is dated the ſixth of the Ides, which is the 10th. of October, but the MS. of the Church of Paris ſays only, Sub die Idus Octobris, before the Ides of October, without mentioning the day, ſo that it may be the 14th. The fourth Seſſion, which ſets down the date of the firſt, does not clear this any thing more, for in the Tranſlation it is the ſixth of the Ides of October, and in the Greek the firſt of the Ides. In the firſt Act the Commiſſioners deferred the Queſtion of Faith the firſt day. The Act where the Faith was treated of ſpeaks of that, wherein the Abſolution of Flavian was handled, as preceding it. It is ſaid about the end, that five days after they will meet to treat of the Doctrine of St. Leo's Letter, which was done on the 17th, in the 4th. Act. Act. II.

Laſtly, the Biſhops of Illyria at the concluſion of the Action, which is commonly thought to be the ſecond, deſire, that Dioſcorus might be brought into the Synod again, and reſtored to his Church. Dioſcorum Synodo Dioſcorum Eccleſiis. Now would they have done it, if his Depoſition had been pronounced in the Council, and ſigned by themſelves. Theſe Reaſons ſeem to render the Common Order to be moſt probable. But on the other ſide Dioſcorus being cited before the Council in the Seſſion wherein he was depoſed, anſwered twice, that in the firſt Seſſion the Commiſſioners of the Emperor were preſent, and that they ſummoned him to a ſecond Seſſion, where they were not. It is then very hard to know the true order of theſe two Seſſions.

However that be, we will not remove the Act, wherein the Queſtion concerning the Faith was debated, from the ſecond place. The ſame Commiſſioners and Biſhops who were preſent at the firſt Action, were alſo at this, and in the ſame order, except thoſe who had been declared unworthy of the Prieſthood in the firſt Action. The Commiſſioners having repreſented, that what concerned the Judgment of Flavian and Euſebius Biſhop of Dorylæum, being judged in the former Seſſion, they ought to take the ſubject of our Faith into Examination, becauſe that was the principal matter for which the Council was aſſembled; that the Emperor had no other Faith than that of the Council of Nice; all the Biſhops declared that they had no other, and that they would not undertake to explain it, nor add any thing to it. Cecropius ſaid, that to confute the Error of Eutyches St. Leo's Letter was ſufficient. The Biſhops ſaid, that they would follow it, and ſubſcribe it. The Commiſſioners ſaid, that it was neceſſary that the Patriarchs ſhould chooſe one or two of the Biſhops of their Dioceſes who were moſt Learned, that they might treat and agree concerning the Faith. All the Biſhops ſaid, that they would not endure any new Expoſition of Faith in Writing, becauſe they had a Canon that forbad it. Florentius Biſhop of Sardis shewed, that it was no easie thing to make an Exposition of Faith so quickly, and demanded time for it. Cecropius required that they should read the Nicene Creed, and St. Leo's Letter. The Judges ordered it should be so, wherefore they read the Nicene and Constantinoplitan Creed, St. Cyril's Second Letter to Nestorius, his Letter of Union to John Bishop of Antioch, St. Leo's Letter to Flavian, and the Passages of the Fathers annexed to it. All the Bishops by their reiterated Acclamations approved the Creeds of Nice and Constantinople. The Bishops of Illyria and Constantinople scrupled some places in St. Leo's Letter, but to satisfie them they proved that there were the like in St. Cyril's Writings. This made them all consent, and all the Synod approved St. Leo's Letter. But since there were some Bishops who had some further Objections about it, they put off the Action five days longer, that they might make the point clearer; and they desired Anatolius to choose out some Bishops from among them, who had signed this Letter, who were most able to explain it to the rest. This Action was ended with Acclamations, in which the Eastern Bishops desired pardon for them of their side, and the Banishment of Dioscorus. On the contrary the Illyrians demanded that he should be still continued in his Church, and have a place in the Synod.

Act. III. In the third Action October 13. the Bishops being assembled without the Commissioners, Eusebius Bishop of Dorylæum presented a new Petition against Dioscorus, accusing him to be of the same Opinion with Eutyches, to have condemned Flavian unjustly, for putting into the Acts of his Council such things as were never spoken, and for forcing the Bishops to sign a Blank Paper. Whereupon he besought the Council to declare all that was done in the Synod of Ephesus under Dioscorus, Null, and to pronounce an Anathema against Eutyches. He prayed the Council to summon Dioscorus to appear before them. The Arch-Deacon Aëtius said, that he had been with Dioscorus and the other condemned Bishops; that Dioscorus had answered, that they were the Guards which had hindred him from coming to the Council. They sought for him abroad, and because they could not find him, they sent to cite him. He answered them that went, that he was under Guard, and they must ask them if they would let him go; that in their return they had met with the Master of the Offices, and returning again with him to bring Dioscorus, He answered them, that upon second Thoughts he had resolved not to go to the Synod, lest the Judges should be forced to examine again what they had resolved. They told him, that they did not call him to weaken what had been decreed, but only to invite him to the Council. Having refused to go they summoned him a second time, but he replyed, that he was Sick, and that he would not go to the Synod, unless the Commissioners were there. He demanded whether Juvenal, Thalassius, and Eustathius were also summoned thither. They said, that it did not concern him that Eusebius Bishop of Dorylæum had accused him only, and as to what he required, that the Commissioners should be present, that was needless, because it was a Matter purely Ecclesiastical, where the Commissioners or Lay-men ought not to assist. Nevertheless he still refused to go. They resolved to cite him a third time. In the mean time Aëtius told the Council that there were at the Door some Clergy-men and Laymen of Alexandria, who desired to be permitted to prefer their Complaints against Dioscorus. They received them, and read their Petitions.

The first was Theodorus's Deacon of Alexandria, who complained, that Dioscorus thrust him out of the Clergy without cause, not bringing any Accusation, nor forming any Complaint against him. He accused him for being an Enemy to all St. Cyril's Relations, for having used them ill, for being of Origen's Opinions, for being guilty of Murther, Theft, making Disturbances and Debaucheries, for having impelled 10 Egyptian Bishops to sign an Excommunication against St. Leo, and offered to prove all these Facts.

The Councils.

The second was Ischyrion's, who also accused Dioscorus for having exercised several Cruelties, plundering Houses, rooting up Trees, forcing private Men from their Estates, for buying the Corn, which the Emperor sent to the Churches of Lybia to make bread for the Holy Sacrament, and to support the Poor and Strangers, for disposing certain Monies which * a Lady left to the Poor and Hospitals of Egypt, to scandalous Persons, for familiarly conversing with † Lewd Women. He added, that Dioscorus had thrust him out of the Clergy for no cause, although he had done much service for the Church of Alexandria in St. Cyril's time, he was one of his Friends; and had caused the Monks to burn his House; Lastly, that he had sent a Company of Church-men to apprehend him, who had slain him, had he not fled from them; that he had seized on him in Alexandria, and shut him up in an Hospital, where he endeavoured also to destroy him.

* Peristeria a Noble Lady.

The third Petition was presented by Athanasius, St. Cyril's Nephew. He accused Dioscorus for deposing him and his Brother, for causing them to be hardly used at Constantinople by Chrysaphius, and to buy their Liberty of him very dearly: that they had been forced to borrow Money at Use, which had ruined them: that his Brother being dead, he was left alone over-whelmed with Debts: that Dioscorus to compleat his ruine had seized upon an House at Alexandria, which was all he had, to make it a Church: that he had thrown him out of the Clergy, and forbidden any Person giving him relief: that he had despoiled him of his Estate, and of what belonged to his Brother's Children, and had reduced them to Beggary.

The fourth Petition was of a Lay-man called Sophronius, who accused Dioscorus not only for not executing the Orders, which the Emperor had directed to him against an Officer of Alexandria, who had carried away his Wife, but also of sending his Deacon to pillage his Estate, and forcing him to fly. The same Sophronius likewise declared, that he was ready to prove, that Dioscorus had uttered Blasphemies against the Trinity, and endeavoured to make himself Supreme over the Province of Egypt. Then they deputed certain Persons to summon him the third time to come aud answer, as well to the Accusations of Eusebius Bishop of Dorylæum, as to other fresh Accusations. The Bishops, who summoned him, shewed him among other things, that he was obliged to go and clear himself of the Accusations formed against him, because the Misdemeanors of the Bishops turning to the general disgrace of the Clergy, he ought to free the Church from it, and if that which they laid to his Charge were false, he ought to justifie himself, and convince the World of his Innocency. Dioscorus gave them no other Answer than this, that he had nothing more to say, that was new.

When they had certified the Council, that Dioscorus would not come to it, Pascasinus asked, what Punishment he had deserved? The Bishops said, that he had offended against the Canons. Then the Pope's Legates declared, that it was evident as well by the Examinations made in the first Assembly, as by what had already passed in this, that he had attempted several things contrary to the Order and Discipline of the Church: First, in that he had absolved the Priest Eutyches by his own Authority, who had been condemned by Flavian his Bishop: that the Holy See had pardoned the other Bishops, who had been forced to do the same, but since had submitted themselves to the Council, but that it ought not to deal so with Dioscorus, because he obstinately persisted in his fault: that he had committed no small Crime in not suffering St. Leo's Letter to be read in the Council of Ephesus: that this notwithstanding, they were ready to use him with the same Lenity as other Bi-ſhops, but ſince he continued in his Obſtinacy, dared to excommunicate St. Leo, and would not appear before the Synod, being ſummoned three times, although he was accuſed of very great Crimes, and had received Perſons depoſed and excommunicated into his Communion. "For theſe cauſes, ſays the "Legate, Leo Archbiſhop of Old Rome, doth by us, "and by the Synod, with the Authority of St. Pe"ter, who is the Rock and Foundation of the "Church, and the Ground of Faith, depoſe him "from his Epiſcopal Dignity, and declare him un"worthy of the Prieſthood. And let all the Coun"cil judge now, what ought to be done with "Dioſcorus according to the Orders of the Holy "Canons.' Anatolius, Maximus Biſhop of Antioch, and all the other Biſhops following Paſcaſinus's Sentence, gave one after another their Votes for the Depoſition of Dioſcorus, and confirmed them with the Seal. Then the Council ſent to the Emperor an Account of their Proceedings, in which they deliver the ſame Motives for the Condemnation of Dioſcorus, which are mentioned in Paſcaſinus's Sentence. They alſo ſent another Relation of them to Pulcheria the Empreſs. Then they certified Dioſcorus of the Judgment pronounced againſt him; they publiſhed it by a private Writing to the Clergy of Alexandria and by a publick Edict to all the People of Chalcedon and Conſtantinople.

XXIV. The Commiſſioners were preſent at the fourth Seſſion held Octo. 17. They began it with reading the Judgment pronounced by the Commiſſioners in the Firſt Action; they alſo read that which was ſaid in the Second, about deferring the Expoſition of Faith. The Commiſſioners demanded of the Council, What they had decreed concerning the Faith? The Pope's Legates ſaid, That they had no other Doctrine or Faith to deliver, than that, which was contain'd in the Creeds of Nice and Conſtantinople, in the Acts of the Council of Epheſus, and in St. Leo's Letter, which agreed exactly with the Doctrine of theſe Councils. All the Biſhops declared that they believed the Doctrine of S. Leo's Letter to be conformable to the Faith of the Nicene Fathers, and alſo thoſe of Conſtantinople and Epheſus. Some of thoſe who were moſt ſcrupulous, declared that in their Judgment S. Leo's Legates had removed all Difficulties, in ſaying, That the Terms of S. Leo's Letter did not imply any Diviſion in the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt. There was a good Biſhop of the Province of Lycaonia, who thought good to ſpeak thus; That his Country had always been free from Controverſies, and had always remained in the Faith of the Fathers with ſimplicity; and that if any Perſons did contradict St. Leo's Expoſition of the Faith, he ſhould be very little concerned; but as to himſelf he believed as the Fathers of the Councils of Nice and Conſtantinople believed. When all the Biſhops had given their Opinions particularly, they made ſeveral Acclamations in common for the Confirmation of what they had ſaid, and deſired that the * five Biſhops who had been depoſed by the Council, and deprived, ſhould be reſtored, becauſe they had ſigned as well as others, and were of the ſame Judgment. The Commiſſioners anſwered, That they had ſpoken to the Emperor for them, and that they ought to wait for his Anſwer; and that as to the reſt, they ſhould give an Account to God for the Depoſition of Dioſcorus, which they had done without the Concurrence of the Emperor, or his Commiſſioners, for the reſtoration of the five Biſhops whom they demanded, and of all which they had done. All the Biſhops cryed out ſeveral times, that Dioſcorus had been juſtly depoſed.

* Juvenal of Jeruſalem. Thalaſſius of Cæſarea. Euſebius Biſhop of Ancyra. Euſtathius of Berytus. Baſili- of Seleucia.

They waited ſome time for the Emperor's Anſwer; but at laſt he ſent the Biſhops of the Council word, That he left them to their own Liberty to do as they thought fit with the five Biſhops depoſed in their firſt Seſſion, viz. Juvenal of Jeruſalem, Thalaſſius of Cæſarea, Euſebius of Ancyra, Baſil of Seleucia, and Euſtathius of Berytus. The Council required, that they ſhould be admitted, and the Commiſſioners ordered it ſo. After they were come in, they declared them Orthodox, and received them into their number. The Commiſſioners then informed the Council, that ſome Biſhops of Egypt had preſented a Petition to the Emperor the day before, in which they explained their Doctrine. They admitted them, and read their Petition, wherein it was contained, That they had no other Faith than that which they received from the beginning of the Church from the Evangeliſt St. Mark, and were taught by St. Peter the Martyr, and their Holy Fathers Athanaſius, Theophilus, and St. Cyril; That they held the Faith of the Fathers of the Council of Nice, and that of St. Athanaſius, and that they anathematized all the Hereſies of Arius, Eunomius, Manichæus, and Neſtorius, and of thoſe, who affirm, That the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt came down from Heaven, or that he did not aſſume it in the womb of the Virgin Mary, the Mother of God, as all other Men do. This Petition was ſigned by 30 Biſhops of Egypt.

The Councils.

The Biſhops of the Council were offended, that they had not condemned Eutyches, nor approved St. Leo's Letter. They demanded by ſeveral Acclamations, that they ſhould pronounce an Anathema to Neſtorius, and ſubſcribe S. Leo's Letter. They declared that they did condemn Eutyches, and approve St. Leo's Letter, but could not ſubſcribe any thing unleſs they had a Patriarch. They demonſtrated in a very affecting way, that it was not lawful for them to do any thing without him; that if they ſigned any thing, they ſhould be torn in pieces in their own Country. The Biſhops did not much regard theſe Excuſes, but cryed out inceſſantly againſt them. But the Commiſſioners being more moderate, declared, That ſince the impediment which kept the Egyptian Biſhops from Subſcribing, was not that they were of a different Judgment, but only a Cuſtom eſtabliſhed among them; by which they were forbidden to do any thing without the Conſent and Order of their Patriarch; and that they deſired to be born with no longer than till they had one: It was juſt and reaſonable, that nothing ſhould be done againſt them, till they had a Patriarch ordain'd, and therefore ſhould remain at Conſtantinople till that time. Paſcaſinus conſented to this Propoſition, upon condition, that they would give ſecurity not to go from Conſtantinople, till they had a Patriarch. The Commiſſioners ordered, That they ſhould give ſecurity for it, or at leaſt, ſhould engage themſelves to it by an Oath.

Then the Monks of Egypt were brought in, who had preſented a Petition to the Emperor to beg of him, that they might not be compelled to ſign any thing. They met with a bad Reception, and ſome body eſpying among them Barſumas, they cryed out, that it was he that ſlew Flavian, that it was he that commanded he ſhould be put to Death. They preſented another Petition to the Synod, in which they required, that Dioſcorus, and the Biſhops of his Party ſhould come to the Synod; That they would annul all things that had been done againſt him, and declared, That if they did not do it, they would ſeparate themſelves from the Biſhops of the Council. When this Petition was read, the Arch-Deacon Aëtius read the 5th. Canon of the Council of Antioch againſt ſuch Monks as did cauſe any Schiſm. Then they queſtioned them about their Faith. They proteſted, That they held the Faith of the Councils of Nice and Epheſus, but would not anathematize Eutyches.

Other Monks preſented a Petition againſt the former, and declared, That they condemned them, deſiring leave to puniſh them who would not ſubſcribe. They then asked Caroſus and Dorotheus, who were the Heads of thoſe obſtinate Monks, but they boldly affirmed, That they would neither ſign St. Leo's Letter, nor condemn Eutyches. They gave them two or three days to conſider what they would do.

After

The Councils.

After this Action there was a Private Session, Octob. 20. against Carosus and Dorotheus, to whom they had given two or three days time; and another of the same day about a difference that happened between Eustathius Bishop of Berytus, and Photius Bishop of Tyre. Neither Evagrius, nor Liberatus make mention of these two Sessions, nor do we meet with them in the Old Translations of the Council, not that they are not real, for there is mention made of the Judgment given by the Council about the affair of Photius in the 10*th*. Action; but because they concerned private matters of small Consequence, or such as had no relation to the Council: for that which respects Carosus, Dorotheus, and Barsumas, and the other Monks, contains nothing remarkable. They had time given them only till Nov. 15, to consult whether they would submit themselves to the Council, which time being passed, if they would not do it, they declare them deprived of their places, and excommunicated.

The Action concerning the difference between Photius Bishop of Tyre, and Eustathius of Berytus is more considerable, but it had no relation to the business for which the Council was called; and for that reason it is, that Evagrius and Liberatus have not spoken of it, and that it is not described in several Copies of the Council. The subject of this Action was this. The Emperor had made the City of Berytus into a Metropolis, this gave Eustathius an Occasion to assume the title of a Metropolitan likewise, and to seize upon the Cities of the Province, which before were subject to the Metropolis of Tyre. He also made Photius Bishop of Tyre consent to this incroachment, and subscribe an Instrument, although against his will. Photius desired to be released from this Obligation, got the Emperor's Letter for that purpose, and presented his Petition to the Council, in which he prayed, that what he had done might not be prejudicial to him, but setting it aside, be established in his Ancient Rights and Privileges. Eustathius asked Photius, whether he would have this business treated on according to the Formalities of the Emperor's Council, or according to the Laws of the Church. Photius answered, that he addressed himself to the Emperor to obtain the Ancient Rights, which the Church of Tyre hath enjoyed, yet he did not reject the Laws of the Church. The Commissioners ordered, that they should determine this business by the Canons, and the Bishops were of the same Opinion. Photius accused Eustathius for having taken * six Cities from him, and prayed him, that they would restore them to him. Eustathius made this Defence, that it had been so decreed by a Synod held at Constantinople, whose Constitution he had brought them signed by Anatolius, and Maximus Bishop of Antioch. He added, that he had never requested the Emperor to make his City a Metropolis; but it was the Custom for the Emperor to make Metropolis's, that it was not he that divided the Provinces, but the Council; and that since the Letter of St. Leo being lately come to Constantinople, a Synod of Bishops assembled in that City had sent it to other Bishops that they might sign it; there was the same reason for the Letter, which had put him in possession of the rights of his Metropolis. Photius complained, that while he was celebrating Ordinations in his Province according to the Ancient Custom they had sent him a Mandate in which they excommunicated him; so that he remained excommunicated for 126 Days. Anatolius, whom this Charge concerned, said, that Photius having done things contrary to the Usage and Order of the Church had been excommunicated by a Synod at Constantinople. Hereupon the Commissioners demanded if it were allowable for Anatolius to send a Writ of Excommunication to Photius, and deprive him of his Suffragans; and lastly, whether they ought to give the Assembly of Bishops met at Constantinople the Name of a Synod. On this last Head one of the Bishops said, with the consent of all, that the Name of a Synod might be attributed to an Assembly of that Nature, and that those who were aggrieved, might apply themselves to it to obtain Justice. But whereas it was objected, that Photius was not present, all the Bishops were of that Opinion, that they could not condemn a Person absent. Anatolius also made a very good Defence for himself upon the first Head, but could not justifie himself as to the second, and a Bishop reproved him for acting contrary to the Laws of the Roman Empire by condemning the Absent. Photius desired them to maintain the Ancient Laws of the Church. All the Bishops answered, that his Request was reasonable, and that the Canon ought to remain in full force. They read the fourth Canon of the Council of Nice concerning the power of a Metropolitan, to ordain Bishops by their Brethren of the same Province. The Commissioners demanded, whether the Bishops of the Province had assisted at the Ordinations of Eustathius. He answered, that since he had enjoyed the right of a Metropolitan, he had always called the Bishops to all the Ordinations that he had made. The Commissioners asked, if according to the Canons there could be two Metropolitans who had a Right to ordain in one Province. The Council answered, that there ought to be but one according to the Canons of the Council of Nice. Then the Commissioners adjudged the Right to Photius in all the Province of Phœnicia Prima, and forbad Eustathius to extend the Pragmatick Sanction of the Emperors to it. The Council approved this determination; the main difficulty was concerning the Bishops ordained by both of them. Whereupon the Council judged, that those whom Photius had ordained, should continue Bishops, although Eustathius had ranked them among the Priests. All the Bishops were of this Opinion. Lastly, * Cecropius put the Council in mind, that to prevent such complaints and troubles for the future, they should decree, that the Letters obtained of the Emperor in what Province soever it be, should not be prejudicial to the Canons, or Ancient Discipline. The Synod, and the Commissioners judged that it ought to be so.

The next Meeting, which is counted the fifth, was held Octob. 22. The Commissioners caused the Confession of Faith, which was composed the day before, to be read; the greatest part of the Bishops approved of it, but the Pope's Legates, and some of the Bishops of the East opposed it. The former did it so Zealously, that they desired that they might return home if they would not keep themselves wholly to St. Leo's Letter. This raised several Acclamations among them, who would have it received. The Commissioners were in some doubts concerning it, because Dioscorus had condemned Flavian, because he said, that there were two Natures in Jesus Christ, and this definition did not distinctly say so, but only that the Union was made of two Natures. Anatolius said, that Dioscorus was not condemned for any point of Faith; but because he had excommunicated St. Leo, and would not come to the Synod. The Legates of the Holy See persisted in their Opposition to this Novel Definition of Faith, saying, that it was needless, and was defective in several things, but others maintained strongly, that it was Necessary and Perfect, and the Commissioners said, that they ought to give the Emperor an Account, and wait for his Orders about it. He then ordered, that they should choose six Bishops out of the Bishoprick of Asia, three out of Pontus, three out of Asia, three out of Thracia, and as many out of Illyria, that they being assembled in the Chappel of the Church of St. Euphemia, may compose a Formula or Confession of Faith, or that every one should declare his Doctrine by his Metropolitan, and added, that if the Bishops would satisfie him about it, he would make them hold a Council in the West. When this Order was come, the Bishops who desired that the definition of Faith which had been read should be approved, made many Acclamations. The Commissioners said,

* Biblon, Botrys Tripolis, Orthosias, Arias, Antaradon.

* Bishop of Sebastopolis.

Act. V.

The Councils.

that it ſeemed neceſſary to add to it according to the Definition of St. Leo, that there are two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt, united without Change, Confuſion, or Separation.

Having received theſe Preparatives, the Biſhops, choſen to compoſe a Confeſſion of Faith, went into the Chappel, and having finiſhed it brought it to the Council. It contained an Approbation of the Creeds of Nice and Conſtantinople, of St. Cyril's Synodical Letters to Neſtorius and the Eaſtern Biſhops, and St. Leo's Letter. After which they add, that following theſe Writings of the Holy Fathers, they did believe in one Lord Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God, perfect God and perfect Man, Conſubſtantial with God as to his Divinity, and with Man according to his Humanity, in whom there are two Natures united without Change, Diviſion, or Separation, ſo that the Properties of the two Natures do ſubſiſt in, and agree to one and the ſame Perſon, who is not divided into two, but is one Jeſus Chriſt as it is ſaid in the Nicene Creed. This Confeſſion of Faith concludes with a Declaration, that thoſe Perſons are depoſed and accurſed, who ſhall dare to compoſe, or propoſe any other Creed, than that of this Council. This Confeſſion of Faith was unanimouſly approved by all the World.

Act. VI. Nov. 25. The Emperor Marcian came in Perſon to the Council. He told the Biſhops that his intent in calling this Council was to preſerve the Faith in its purity, and to condemn Error; that he came to this Synod not to ſhew his Authority, but only to provide for their Peace, according to the Example of Conſtantine; that he had no other deſign but to procure a firm Union among all his Subjects in the ſame Faith, and that thoſe diſturbances which have been raiſed ſome years ſince by the Covetouſneſs and Paſſion of ſeveral Perſons, ſhould be appeaſed wholly by this Council. After ſeveral Applauſes given him, Aetius read the Confeſſion of Faith, which had been already approved and ſigned by all the Biſhops, who appeared more numerous in this Seſſion than any other. Several Metropolitans ſigned it in their own and in the Name of the Biſhops of their Province, whoſe Names they ſet down, and that's the reaſon that the number of the Biſhops of the Council of Chalcedon amounts to ſo many; although, if we count the number of Biſhops named in this place, of whom above one hundred were abſent, it comes to no more than 470. Then the Biſhops began ſome loud Acclamations again, but the Emperor put a ſtop to them by wiſhing good Succeſs to their Aſſembly, and declaring, That whoſoever ſhall celebrate any publick Aſſemblies about Religion, &c. ſtir up any troubles by his Diſputes, ſhall be thruſt out of the Imperial City, if he be a Lay-man; and depoſed, if he be a Clergy-man.

The Matter of Faith being determined in this manner, he required the Synod to approve ſome Regulations which he had made, and which he thought more for the honour of the Synod to confirm by the Authority of the Biſhops, than to make them himſelf by a Law.

The firſt was this, That although they were to be had in great eſteem, who live a Monaſtick Life, yet becauſe ſome Perſons, under a pretence of embracing Monkery, diſturb the Church and the Publick Peace, it ſhall be forbidden any Church to build a Monaſtery in any City, without the permiſſion of the Biſhop, and the Owner of the Lands on which it is built. That the Monks ſhould be ſubject to their Biſhop, and content themſelves with Faſting and Prayer, without concerning themſelves either with Civil or Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, unleſs they are called to it by the Biſhop of the City. Laſtly, that Monks ſhould not be allowed to receive Slaves into their Monaſteries, nor any Perſons obliged to the Service of another, without the conſent of thoſe to whom they belong.

* This Regulation is wanting in Baronius and Longus.

* The ſecond was to forbid the Clergy to hold Farms, or be Managers of Civil Affairs, yet they were not prohibited to take care of the Revenue of the Church, if their Biſhop ordered them to do it.

The third was, That it ſhould not be allowed a Clergy-man of one Church to leave it, and officiate in another; but every one ſhall be obliged to continue in the Church, to which he was at firſt appointed. And if any Biſhop hereafter ſhall receive the Clerk of another Biſhop, he ſhall be excommunicated with the Clerk he hath received. All the Biſhops approved of theſe Conſtitutions, and gave their Bleſſing to the Emperor. The Councils.

Laſtly, the Emperor ſaid, That in reſpect to St. Euphemia and the Council, he did beſtow upon the City of Chalcedon the Title of a Metropolis, nevertheleſs not encroaching upon the Rights of the City of Nicomedia. The Biſhops having approved it, requeſted, that they might have leave to depart home; but the Emperor deſired them to ſtay three or four days longer to compleat the Regulations. Evagrius ſays, that in the following Seſſion they made other Canons; and indeed, there are ſome MSS. of Ancient Verſions, wherein there are ſome Canons made after the Sixth Seſſion. But Liberatus places the Canons in the fifth Seſſion, as they were in the Greek Copies. The MS. of the Church of Paris, wherein there are ſome Canons after the Sixth Seſſion may well be thought to have been diſordered, and the Canons put out of their Natural place, for we read at the end of the 14th. Action. Explicit Actio XIV. The 14th. Action is ended. Incipit XVI. The 16th. beginneth. An evident proof that one Action is omitted, which can be no other than the 15th. Act. X.

Act. VII. The Conteſt between Maximus Biſhop of Antioch, and Juvenal Biſhop of Jeruſalem, is certainly the firſt which was diſcuſſed Octob. 26. It continued not long, but was determined by the Council with the Conſent of both Parties. They left both the Phœnicia's and Arabia to the Biſhop of Antioch, and the three Paleſtines to the Biſhop of Jeruſalem.

Act. VIII. The ſame Day, but at another Seſſion, they finally determined the cauſe of Theodoret, as we have already ſaid in the Life of that Author.

Act. IX. In another Seſſion on the ſame Day, they entered upon the buſineſs of Ibas, who had been condemned in the Council of Epheſus under Dioſcorus. He pleaded, that he was Innocent; and as a proof of it, he alledged the Judgment given by Photius Biſhop of Tyre, and Euſtathius Biſhop of Berytus, who were put in Commiſſion by the Emperor to judge of his Cauſe. They read the Judgment of thoſe Biſhops, by which he was proved to be of Orthodox Sentiments; and to be reconciled with his Accuſers by thoſe Biſhops; to have publickly anathematized Neſtorius to ſatisfie thoſe, who had taken Offence at ſome of his Diſcourſes; and alſo promiſed to forget what had paſſed, and not to be ſevere againſt thoſe who had accuſed him of Managing the Revenues of the Church by Stewards, according to the Cuſtom of the Church of Antioch.

The next day they went on in the ſame buſineſs; they read the Acts of the Synod held at Berytus, in which he was accuſed of ſeveral Crimes, viz. Theft, Simony, and Bribery, and that he did affirm, that he envyed not Jeſus Chriſt the Name of God, becauſe he could become one. But his Accuſers not being able to produce any Witneſſes, nor any Proof to convict him of theſe things, they wrangled ſome time about his reproving a Clergyman for affirming, That our Life is dead. But he cleared himſelf by ſaying that he ſpoke it, as if he underſtood by our Life the Godhead; that it was not true, that the Life is dead, but if he underſtood the enlivened Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt, it was true. They accuſed him alſo of ſpeaking againſt St. Cyril; and having curſed him, he anſwered, that before he was united with the Eaſtern Biſhops, he had rejected his Chapters, and had condemned him, in which he was not more blameworthy than the reſt of the Eaſtern Biſhops: But ſince the Union he had communicated with him, and had never condemned him. They produced his Letter to Maris the Perſian, which proved nothing more. In it he condemned St. Cyril's Chapters, and praiſeth the Writings of Theodorus of Mopſueſta, but he he approved of the Peace and Union made with St. Cyril after he had explained himself. On his behalf he caused a Letter from the Clergy of Edessa to be read, attesting, that they had never heard him speak any thing like that which they accused him of. When they had read these Acts, they would have had that which was done against Ibas in the Council of Ephesus under Dioscorus read, but the Legates said, that it was needless to read any thing of this Council; that the Bishop of Rome had declared all that was done in it void, except the Ordination of Maximus Bishop of Antioch, whom St. Leo had received to his Communion; that they ought to petition the Emperor to make a Law, forbidding any further mention of this Council. The principal of the Bishops were of the same Opinion, and all the other contented by their Acclamations. Then they returned to the business of Ibas, and he was declared Orthodox upon the Account of his Letter, and the Acts which had been read: But because there had been another Bishop ordained in his Place, it was left to Maximus his Metropolitan to do as he thought fit. His Judgment was, that Nonnus should hold the Title of Bishop, till he should examine his Ordination by the Bishops of his Dioceſs. The Commissioners approved the Judgment of the Synod.

Act. X. At the End of this Session is put a private Action concerning Domnus Patriarch of Antioch, who had been deposed by Dioscorus. 'Tis but a short Relation, and extant in Latin only, which was found by Rusticus in a Manuscript of Patricius Julianus. F. Quesnel thinks it a Forgery. M. Baluzius on the contrary maintains, that it is Genuine. Before we examine their Reasons, we will speak of the Subject of it. It bears date Nov. 26. In it Maximus petitions, that they would have some pity upon Domnus, who was not long since Bishop of Antioch, and grant him a certain Stipend out of the Revenues of his Church. The Pope's Legates answered, that St. Leo having confirmed the Ordination of Maximus, they thought it sufficient to do for Domnus, to leave it to Maximus to allow him a competent Maintenance out of the Revenues of his Church; that he ought to content himself for the future with such a Competency, and to be quiet. Anatolius, Juvenal, and the other Bishops commended Maximus for his Kindness, and the Commissioners concluded with the Bishops, that Domnus should be allowed something out of the Revenues of the Church of Antioch; but they left it wholly to the Discretion and Bounty of Maximus to give him what he pleased.

But for the better understanding of this part of the History, we must know, that Domnus was taken out of a Monastery by his Uncle John Bishop of Antioch; and after he had been some time with him, he succeeded him. The Author of the Life of St. Euthemius saith, that this Saint had foretold a long time before what should befal him, that he should leave his Monastery, that he should succeed his Uncle, but that he should be deprived through the Craft of wicked Men, who would make use of his Simplicity and Ignorance to seduce him. Whether this Prediction were true, or not, it is certain, that all this befel him, for he succeeded his Uncle, and afterward was deposed by Dioscorus, not being aware of his Designs. The Author of the Life of Euthemius saith, that he returned to his Monastery, being very much troubled that he ever went from it, and did ever bewail it in all the rest of his Life. It is indubitable that he never recovered his See, and that the Ordination of Maximus, who was ordain'd in his place, was held good. We shewed in the foregoing Action, that it was the only thing that the Council approved, because they said that St. Leo had acknowledged him for a Bishop. But why was Domnus of all the Bishops who were condemned, by the false Council of Ephesus, the only one excepted? Why did they approve of Maximus's Ordination? How could it hold good, while Domnus was alive? What Reason could they have to confirm the Condemnation of Domnus? He indeed condemned Flavian, but several others did it as well as he. Two things only can be alledged in Answer to these Objections, viz. Either that he was dead when the Council of Chalcedon was held, or that he renounced his Bishoprick, and voluntarily resigned his place to Maximus, preferring a Retirement and solitary Life before the troubles of the World, and the Episcopal Charge, as the Author of the Life of Euthemius writes.

The Councils.

F. Quesnel affirms, that he was dead, when the Council of Chalcedon was held; and consequently maintains, that this Action which we have related is forged. The Arguments which he uses are these:

1. It is no where extant in Greek, and the Latin Version hath been found by Rusticus only in the MS. of the Lady Juliana: It is not to be met with in any of the MSS. in the Monastery of the Acœmetæ, nor in any others, which we have reviewed. It is not in the MS. of Probus, nor of the Queen of Sweden, nor that at Paris.

2. No Ancient Author hath made mention of it, though they had Occasion to speak of it. It seems a good conclusion from the silence of Evagrius, that there was no Copy of this Action at Antioch; and because Liberatus counts but 16 Sessions of this Council, that it was neither in Africa, Rome, nor Alexandria, from whence he took the Latin Version of the Council of Chalcedon; and lastly, from the Confession of Rusticus, who cites only the MS. of the Lady Juliana, although he had seen the MSS. of Rome, Chalcedon, Alexandria, and Constantinople. So that all the Proof of this Action depends upon the Authority of one MS. only, of which we know nothing but by the report of Rusticus, who being engaged among the Party of those, who could not approve the Condemnation of the three Chapters, was obliged to make it appear, that Domnus was not condemned after his Death, but in his Life-time.

3. This pretended Action hath no fixed Place; Rusticus puts it after the seventh Action, but it bears date with the 10th, after which it is now usually placed.

4. Justinian, and the fifth Council assure us, that the Council of Chalcedon condemned Domnus after his Death for having written against St. Cyril's Chapters. This Testimony seems positive. F. Quesnel also proves, that Domnus was dead before the Council of Chalcedon, because St. Leo speaks not of him, and because in the 14th. Action Athanasius of Paros speaks of him as dead, saying, the Bishop of Antioch that then was, was his Enemy. And in the Edict of Theodosius, it is said, that he was Bishop of Antioch. If he had been alive, why did he not come to the Council? Why did not his Friends speak for him? Why did they not join him with the other Bishops who were deposed for signing the Deposition of Flavian, but restored by this Council? M. Baluzius also furnishes F. Quesnel with a full Testimony from Eutyches, who says that Domnus died the next Year after the Council of Ephesus.

5. The Style of this Piece discovers the Imposture, which is full of Solœcisms, and barbarous Words. In it the Bishop of Rome is called plain Pope, without any Addition of Honour or Respect.

6. It is much easier to justifie the Action of St. Leo, and the Council of Chalcedon, in approving the Ordination of Maximus, by supposing rather that Domnus was dead, than alive; for in this last case, it seems unjust to maintain an Intrusion against a lawful Bishop. F. Quesnel alledges several other Reasons in a Dissertation made on Purpose upon this Subject, but these are the principal, and to me the strongest.

M. Baluzius answers to these Objections, that there are several genuine Pieces, of which we have only Translations, and that the MS. of the Lady Juliana is of a very great Authority, since Rusticus assures us, that it was very ancient in his time. That Rusticus cannot be justly charged with Falsehood, nor Ignorance; that 'tis no wonder that the Action concerning Domnus hath no fixed place, since the same hath happened to the Action about Photius and Euſtathius; that the Teſtimony of Juſtinian and the fifth Council is of no worth, becauſe they have alledged ſeveral falſe things, and there is nothing in the Acts of the Council againſt Domnus. That the ſilence of Evagrius and Liberatus prove no more, than that this Action was not found in the Copies which they uſed. That it is no wonder that Domnus was not reſtored, nor that no Man required that he ſhould, ſince he deſired it not, but preferred retirement in his Monaſtery before an Epiſcopal Charge. That when ſpeaking of Domnus, it is ſaid, that he was a Biſhop, it is not meant that he was dead, but only that he was not then, what he had once been, a Biſhop. That it ought not to ſeem ſtrange that the Style of this Tranſlation is barbarous, ſince the like Barbariſms are met with in other Verſions, and the plain Name of Pope for the Biſhop of Rome is found in ſome Places of the Council of Chalcedon. But the ſtrongeſt Argument made uſe of by M. Baluzius, to prove that this Action is Genuine, beſides the Authority of the Lady Juliana's MS. is, that in the 10th. Action Steven Biſhop of Epheſus ſays, after Paſcaſinus and Anatolius, that the Ordination of Maximus was approved by St. Leo, and the Synod. It ſeems that this relates to the Action concerning Domnus. But this ſeems ſomething impertinent. 'Tis ſufficient, that St. Leo and the Council did acknowledge Maximus for a lawful Biſhop, to ground this Aſſertion upon. It is not neceſſary that they ſhould ſpeak of Domnus. Theſe are the Reaſons of the two moſt able Criticks of our time about the Action of Domnus. Let every one follow which of theſe Opinions ſeems moſt probable to him.

Act. XI, and XII.

The 11th. and 12th. Actions are about one Buſineſs, though upon two ſeveral days. In them the Council examined the difference between Steven and Baſſianus, who both of them pretended to be Biſhops of Epheſus. Firſt, they read the Petition of Baſſianus addreſſed to the Emperor, in which he repreſents it to him, how ill he had been uſed, that he was taken from his Church by Force, plundered of his Eſtate, and many of his People ſlain by the Vertue of the Blows. He prayed the Emperor to allow him to go to the Council, and ſecure him againſt any Violence. In the Council Baſſianus declared, that Steven had been the Ringleader of this unjuſt Force. Steven being ſummoned to anſwer to this Accuſation, objected to Baſſianus, that he had not been ordained at Epheſus, but that he had intruded into the vacant Church by the Help of a ſeditious Troop; that being afterward thruſt out, he himſelf was ordained by four Biſhops of Aſia, with the conſent of the Clergy and People of Epheſus; that he had been 50 Years a Clergyman of that Church. Baſſianus affirmed, that he had been Canonically ordain'd; that when he was but a Youth, he had founded an Hoſpital of 70 Beds for ſick Men; that Memnon Biſhop of Epheſus bearing him a Grudge, had ordained him Biſhop of Evaſa, although he was not willing to accept it, and to force him to it, he had ſo cruelly uſed him before the Altar for three hours together, that the Altar and the Holy Goſpels were covered with Blood; that after this he remained at Epheſus, and would not go to the Church, of which he had been ordained Biſhop, nor did he ever ſee it; that Memnon being dead, Baſilius was ordained in his place in a Council of the Province, who being informed that Baſſian had been made Biſhop of Evaſa by Force, ſent another Biſhop thither, to whom he granted Communion, and the Title of Biſhop; that after the Death of Baſilius, the People, Clergy and Biſhops, of whom Olympius, now preſent at the Council, was one, had placed him in the See of Epheſus; that the Emperor had confirmed his Ordination; that when he was at Conſtantinople, he had communicated with Proclus, who ſent him a Synodical Letter; that he had enjoyed his Biſhoprick peaceably four Years, had ordained 10 Biſhops, and many Clerks; that one day after the Celebration of the Holy Sacrament, they ſeized upon him, and pulling off his Epiſcopal Veſtments, put them upon Steven. Steven reported, that Baſſian had been deprived by a Synod with the conſent of St. Leo, Flavian, and the Patriarchs of Alexandria and Antioch; that the Emperor had ſent the Silentiary Euſtathius to be informed of the Wrongs, which he was accuſed to have done to the Poor; that he never was ordained Biſhop of Epheſus; and if he were four Years in poſſeſſion of it, 'twas as an Uſurper, not as a lawful Biſhop. Baſſian replied, that he had been duly ordained Biſhop of the Church of Evaſa, but had never been there. He deſired them to take Cognizance of the Violence. Steven on his Part deſired them to read the Canons, which forbid one Biſhop ordained for any certain Church to enter upon another. Leontius read the 16 and 17 Canons of the Council of Antioch, which were the 95 and 96 in the Book they then uſed. They then prayed Olympius to tell them how things had paſſed. He then ſaid, that after the Death of Baſil, being intreated by the Clergy to come to Epheſus to ordain a Biſhop, he went thither ſuppoſing to meet ſome other Biſhops there; that after he had waited three days, he ſaid to the Clergy, who were come to meet him, that he could do nothing alone; that the Canons of the Church did not permit him to ordain a Biſhop, but eſpecially of ſo great a Metropolis; that as he ſpake this, there came a throng of People, which took him up, and carried both him and Baſſian to the Church, where he enthroned him. They then demanded of the Clergy, Whether Proclus had received Baſſianus? Theophilus, a Prieſt of the Church, anſwered, that he had owned him, communicated with him, gave him a Synodical Letter, and put his Name in the Dypticks. They asked Steven, how Baſſian had been put out of the Biſhoprick of Epheſus? He anſwered, that the Biſhop of Alexandria had made enquiry into it by the Emperor's Order; that St. Leo had declared by his Letter, that he ought not to be a Biſhop; that afterward the Silentiary came to examine his Management, and had condemned him; that it was not Steven that had ſollicited him to it; that they had made him a Biſhop, when he had no thoughts of it; and that, laſtly, it was a matter concluded upon. Baſſian complained of his Force uſed againſt him, he ſaid, that Steven came to communicate with him, when he ſeized upon him, and then impriſoned him three Months; that Steven was ordained by the ſame Biſhops that ordain'd him. Then they heard the Clergy of Epheſus, who teſtified, that they had uſed Violence to Baſſian. The Biſhops at firſt determined in his Favour, but the Commiſſioners ſaid, that they thought it moſt juſt that neither of them ſhould be Biſhop of Epheſus. Baſſian, becauſe he had got into Poſſeſſion by Force, and without obſerving the Rules preſcribed by the Canons; Steven, becauſe he was ordained by a Club, and by unlawful ways. The Biſhops agreed to this Sentence, and confirmed it the next day, and ordered a third Perſon to be ordained Biſhop of Epheſus. The Commiſſioners concluded the Matter ſo, yet allowing Baſſian and Steven two hundred Nobles apiece, to be paid them out of the Revenues of the Church for a Penſion towards their Maintenance. Baſſian deſired that they would reſtore what had been taken from him. The Commiſſioners replied, that if any thing had been taken from him, it ſhould be reſtored when he ſhould make a ſufficient Proof of it in Juſtice. Theſe two Actions, according to Evagrius, and the ancient Verſion, make but one. Liberatus diſtinguiſhes them, but he confounds the ſecond of them with the following Action.

The Councils.

This was alſo upon Octob. 30. The Biſhop of Nicomedia preſented a Petition againſt Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Nice, in which he accuſed him of diſturbing the Province of Bithynia by changing the ordinary Form, and invading the Churches belonging to his Juriſdiction. Anaſtaſius on the other ſide affirmed, that the Biſhop of Nicomedia had taken away ſome Churches that did of right belong unto him, and was in poſſeſſion of them. To prove this, he alledged, that Julian had made the City of Nice a Metropolis, that Act. XIII.

ever since the Church of Basinople, about which the main Controverſie was, had been under the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Nice; that St. John Chryſoſtome had written to the Biſhop of Nice to come to Baſinople, to regulate that Church, as being ſubject to his Authority; that he could prove, that the Biſhops of Baſinople, have been ordained uſually at Nice. Eunomius maintained the contrary. They read the fourth Canon of the Council of Nice, which forbids Biſhops to ordain without their Metropolitan. Anaſtaſius Biſhop of Nice contended, that he did enjoy that right; and to prove it, he produced the Letters Patents of the Emperors Valentinian and Valens, which confirmed the right of a Metropolis to the City of Nice, upon condition, that it ſhould be ſubject to the Judge of Bithynia, and without any Prejudice to the Rights of other Cities. Eunomius read others of the ſame Emperors, which ſignified, that the Honour and Title of Metropolis granted to Nice ſhould do no injury to the Rights of others. The Commiſſioners judged, that the Emperor's Letters importing that the Title of Metropolis granted to the City of Nice, ſhould not hurt the Rights of other Cities, and chiefly of the City of Nicomedia, they ought to obſerve the Decree of the Council of Nice, which forbids, that there ſhould be more than one Metropolitan in one Province. The Biſhops were of the ſame Opinion, and declared, that the Ordinations of the Province of Bithynia ought to belong to the Biſhop of Nicomedia. Aetius the Archdeacon of Conſtantinople moved it, that the Conteſt between the Biſhops of Nicomedia and Nice ought not to prejudice the Rights of his Patriarch, who ought to ordain at Baſinople, or at leaſt that no Ordination ſhould be celebrated there without his Permiſſion. The Biſhops made no other Anſwer but this, that the Canons ought to be obſerved. The Commiſſioners finally determined, that the Biſhop of Nicomedia ſhould have Authority over all the Churches of Bithynia, and that the Biſhop of Nice ſhould only have the Title of Metropolitan, and ſhould be ſubject to the Biſhop of Nicomedia; and as to the Rights of the Church of Conſtantinople, they would ſpeak of that in its place.

Act. XIV. In the following Seſſion, which was held Octob. ult. they read the Petition of Biſhop Sabinian, relating, that he had been ordained Biſhop of Paros by the Metropolitan, and Biſhops of the Province in the Room of Athanaſius, who was deprived, becauſe he being accuſed of great Crimes, and ſummoned to Judgment, he durſt not appear; that nevertheleſs the Council of Epheſus under Dioſcorus had ſent for Athanaſius, who challenged his Biſhoprick. Athanaſius made his Defence, ſaying, that a good while ſince his Cauſe had been examined by St. Cyril and Proclus, who wrote in his behalf to Domnus, and had a promiſe from him, that he would ſatisfie them, but after St. Cyril's death he altered his mind, and had ſummoned him to Judgment; that he anſwered him, that if he would keep to St. Cyril's and Proclus's Letters he would appear, otherwiſe he would not obey his Summons. He requeſted that Proclus's and St. Cyril's Letters might be read, which ſhewed, that Athanaſius complained of what he had ſuffered from his Clergy, who had forced him from his Biſhoprick; that they had preſumed to turn out, or make Stewards according to their Humour, to put their Biſhop's Name out of the Dypticks, and make many other inſufferable Attempts; that Domnus ought to hinder this diſorder, or if that City were too far diſtant from Antioch, to name Commiſſioners about the Places to look into it, becauſe the Metropolitan was ſuſpected by him. Domnus had already appointed for one Commiſſioner Panolbius Biſhop of Hierapolis, a Friend of Athanaſius's, but he would not appear before him; on the other ſide he refuſed by a Writing delivered to him to forſake his Biſhoprick. John the Succeſſor of Panolbius cited Athanaſius alſo. Laſtly, Domnus himſelf cited him to his Council, but inſtead of appearing, he went and ſollicited St. Cyril and Proclus, and having repreſented his caſe otherwiſe than it was, he obtained the Letters of them, of which we have ſpoken. Then Domnus again ſummoned him before a Council aſſembled at Antioch, where the Clergy of Paros appeared to accuſe him, and the Biſhops of the Synod condemned him. This was proved to the Council of Chalcedon by the reading of the Acts of the ſaid Council.

The Councils.

The Commiſſioners then determined, that Athanaſius having been depoſed according to Form, Sabinian had been duly ordained, and Athanaſius not rightly reſtored by Dioſcorus; that nevertheleſs Maximus ought to examine in a Synod within eight Months the Accuſations which are laid to his Charge, or may be brought againſt him; and if he be convinced of the Crimes imputed to him, he ſhould not only be depoſed, but puniſhed according to Law: But on the other ſide, if they do not furniſh out a Proceſs, and convict him within the time limited, he ſhall continue Biſhop of Paros, and Sabinian ſhall enjoy the Name and Title of Biſhop, and ſhall be maintained at the Expence of the Church.

The 15th. Seſſion in the ordinary Editions, and according to Liberatus, contains the Canons of the Council. Act. XV.

The I. commands, that the Canons made by the preceding Councils be obſerved.

The II. enjoyns, that if any Biſhop ordain for Money, or ſells the Gifts of the Spirit, which are invaluable, whether it be a Biſhop that is ordained for filthy Lucre, or a Prieſt, or a * Suffragan Biſhop, or a Deacon, or any other Clergyman, or a Steward, or an Advocate, he ſhall be depoſed, who is proved to have done it, and the Perſon ordained; and if any Perſon be a Procurer of it for Gain, he ſhall be depoſed, if he be a Clergyman; and excommunicated, if he be a Monk, or a Layman. * Chor-Epiſcopus.

The III. forbids Biſhops, Clergymen or Monks to hire Farms, or engage themſelves in worldly Affairs, unleſs the Law obliges them to be Guardians, or the Biſhops charge them with the Adminiſtration of the Church, or to take care of the Widows and Orphans, and ſuch Perſons as ſtand in need of the Relief of the Church.

The IV. Canon concerning the Monks is the ſame with the ſixth Seſſion.

The V. revives the ancient Canons againſt thoſe Clergymen, who remove from one City to another.

The VI. forbids the Ordination of any Clergyman abſolutely and without a Church-Title; that is to ſay, who is not ſet apart for the Service of ſome Church, either in the City or Country, or of ſome Chappel or Monaſtery; and declares thoſe Ordinations void that are celebrated otherwiſe: And forbids them that are ſo ordained to do the Functions of their Miniſtry, that they may conceal them from diſgrace that have ordained them.

The VII. forbids thoſe that have been ordained, or are made Monks, to leave their Stations, and declares them excommunicate that do it.

The VIII. enjoyns the Clergy that belong to Monaſteries, and Chappels of Martyrs, to be ſubject to their Biſhops.

The IX. forbids thoſe Clergymen who have any differences with other Clergymen to apply themſelves to any other Judicature, than the Biſhops, or them who are appointed Judges by them, and commands, that if any Clergyman have any thing againſt his Biſhop, he ſhould addreſs himſelf to a Provincial Synod, or if he hath any thing to do with his Metropolitan, he ſhall go to the Exarch of the Dioceſs.

The X. ſhews, that it is forbidden a Clergyman to be intituled to two Churches at one time, to that in which he was ordained, and that to which he is removed; and that thoſe who do it, ſhall be obliged to return to their Church, or if they remain in the Church to which they are removed, they ſhall have nothing of the Revenue of the Church which they have left, nor of the Hoſpitals of that Church.

The XI. makes a diſtinction between Letters of Recommendation, which are given to Perſons ſuſpected and unknown, and Letters of Communion, which are given to Perſons well known. It declares, that theſe laſt ought to be given to the Poor.

The XII. forbids Biſhops to divide their Provinces by obtaining Letters Patents from the Emperor to raiſe their City to the Title of a Metropolis, and declares, that the Biſhops of thoſe Cities, who have been raiſed to their Dignity by their Princes Letters, ſhould have the Honour and Title only of a Metropolitan, but none of the Rights of a real Metropolitan.

The XIII. ſhews, that they will not receive ſtrange and unknown Clergymen without Commendatory Letters from their Biſhops.

The XIV. forbids Readers and Singers to marry Heretical Wives, and obliges them that have married ſuch to bring their Children to the Church to be baptized, and to bring them up in the Faith of the Church.

The XV. forbids the Ordination of a Deaconeſs before 40 Years of Age, and without ſtrict Examination; and declares, that if ſhe ſhall marry after ſhe hath been ſome time in the Service of the Church, ſhe ſhall be excommunicated with her Husband.

The XVI. tells us, that it is not permitted Virgins, which are devoted to God to marry; that they, who have done ſo, ſhall be excommunicated; that nevertheleſs the Biſhop of the place may treat them with ſuch Lenity and Mildneſs as he thinks fit.

The XVII. That the Churches or Pariſhes ſhould remain under the Juriſdiction of thoſe Biſhops who are in poſſeſſion of them, eſpecially if they have been ſo for 30 years paſt; but if within 30 years paſt there hath been any diſpute about them, it ſhall be permitted to refer themſelves to the Provincial Synod, or if it be a Biſhop who is injured by his Metropolitan, he may, have recourſe to * the Biſhop of his Dioceſs, or the Biſhop of Conſtantinople. Laſtly, if the Emperor changes the condition of a City by his Authority, the order of the Pariſh Churches ſhall follow the Civil Conſtitution.

* The Patriarch.

The XVIII. forbids Clergymen and Monks to make Conſpiracies, Cabals, or Factions againſt their Biſhop.

The XIX. revives the Decree of the Council of Nice, for the holding of Provincial Councils twice a Year.

The XX. forbids Biſhops taking Clergymen from other Biſhops.

The XXI. commands, that it be examined what manner of Perſons they are that accuſe Biſhops, or other Church-men, before their Accuſation be received.

The XXII. ſhews, that it is not lawful for the Clergy to ſeize upon the Eſtate of their Biſhops after he is dead.

The XXIII. orders the Advocates of the Church of Conſtantinople to bid the ſtrange Monks that come into that City without leave from their Biſhop, to depart from thence.

The XXIV. That the places, where any Monaſtery hath been built, ſhould always be ſet apart for that uſe.

The XXV. enjoyns Metropolitans to celebrate Ordinations three Months after the Death of a Biſhop, and in the mean time to take care of the Revenues of the Church by the Stewards.

The XXVI. enjoyns every Biſhop to have a Steward of the Revenues of his Church.

The XXVII. depoſes or excommunicates thoſe, who take away Women by Force under a pretence of marrying them, and thoſe, who pretend to defend them.

The XXVIII. Canon grants to the Church of the City of Conſtantinople, which is called new Rome, the ſame Privileges with old Rome, becauſe this City is the ſecond City in the World. It alſo adjudges to it beſides this the Juriſdiction over the Dioceſes of Pontus, Aſia, and Thrace, and over the Churches which are out of the bounds of the Emperor, and a right to ordain Metropolitans in the Provinces of theſe Dioceſes.

The Councils.

The XXIX. Canon is a repetition of what had been ſaid before by Paſcaſinus and Anatolius, that it is Sacrilege to reduce a Biſhop to the degree of a Prieſt, becauſe, when a Biſhop deſerves to be deprived of his Biſhoprick, he is not worthy to be a Prieſt, at leaſt if he be not unjuſtly depoſed.

The XXX is alſo a repetition of what had been ordered upon the Account of the Egyptian Biſhops, who would not ſign the Condemnation of Neſtorius.

Upon ſerious conſideration we ſhall find, that theſe 30 Canons are only an Explication of three Canons of the 6th. Seſſion, or Decrees made in the Council upon ſeveral occaſions, which ſome made a 16th. Action; but others have put in this place becauſe the following Action informs us, that the 28th. Canon was made the Day before. As for my ſelf I much doubt whether this Collection of Canons was made in any Seſſion of the Council, and do rather believe that they were compoſed ſince, and taken out of the ſeveral Actions. 'Tis eaſie to find the places.

Nov. 1. (For though this Action be ordinarily dated Octob. 28, 'tis a fault, which is not in the MS, of Dijon, which is an Original) the Pope's Legates complain'd that after they and the Commiſſioners were departed, the Biſhops had made ſeveral Orders contrary to the Canons and Diſcipline of the Church; they required, that they ſhould be read over again. Before they were read Aetius the Archdeacon ſaid, that the Cuſtom of Synods was, to make other Conſtitutions after they had decided what concerns the Faith; that being about to do it for the Church of Conſtantinople, they had prayed the Legates to be preſent, but they refuſed, with which having acquainted the Commiſſioners they had ordered the Council to do what they thought convenient; that they had deliberated freely, and had done nothing clancularly. They then read the Canon concerning the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. Paſcaſinus in the firſt place ſaid, that they had ſurprized the Biſhops by making them ſubſcribe the Decrees which they had no knowledge of. All the Biſhops ſaid, that it was not ſo, that no body was compelled, and every one knew what he did. Lucentius then complained, that they had deſpiſed the Canons of the Council of Nice, by preferring the Decrees of a Council held 150 years after, before them. He cauſed the Order to be read, which they had received from St. Leo, commanding to oppoſe thoſe Biſhops, who took too much upon them, upon the account of the Splendor of their Sees, and hinder them from attempting any thing. The Commiſſioners ordered the Canons to be read on both ſides. Paſcaſinus read the 6th. Canon of Nice, with an Addition prefixed, which aſſerted, that the Church of Rome hath always had a Primacy. Aetius read it without the Addition with the Canon of the Council of Conſtantinople. They demanded if the Biſhops of Aſia and Pontus had voluntarily ſigned the Decree in queſtion, and they anſwered, Yes, and that the Biſhop of Conſtantinople was in poſſeſſion of the Right of Ordinations among them; but Euſebius Biſhop of Ancyra anſwered, that although he had ſigned it, and was not willing to oppoſe the general conſent, yet it is true that he was ordained at Gungra; that he did not ſeek to perform thoſe Ordinations; that all that he deſired was, that nothing ſhould be exacted of the Biſhops at their Ordinations. They made anſwer, that it was forbidden by the Canons; that the Altars were pure. Euſebius anſwered, that he did not fear any ſuch thing of Anatolius, but no Man was Immortal. Anatolius asked him who ordained him, he ſaid, that by misfortune he was at Conſtantinople, and Proclus had ordained him.

Laſtly,

The Councils.

Lastly, the Commissioners published the Result of the Acts and Depositions, which had been made, that the Bishop of Rome should have the Primacy and chief Honour; that the Bishop of Constantinople should enjoy the same Prerogatives of Honour, and had a right to ordain in the Sees of the Metropolis's, in the Dioceses of Thrace, Asia, and Pontus, such Persons as should be chosen by the Clergy, People, and Nobles; that they were to give him Notice of this Election, and know whether he desired the Person that was chosen should come to him to be ordained at Constantinople, or whether he would allow him to be ordained in the Province; that it was also likely that the Metropolitans had a Right to ordain the Bishops of the Province according to the Custom, without the leave of the Bishop of Constantinople: All the Bishops approved of this Resolution. The Legates of the Pope were the only Persons which said, That they ought not to debase the Holy See so much in their presence; they demanded, that they would put out of the Acts that which had passed the day before to the prejudice of the Ecclesiastical Constitutions; or if they would not, their Opposition might be annexed to the Acts, that they might make their report of it to him that governs the Apostolick See, who is the first Bishop of the World, who may judge himself of the Injury done to his See, and of the Subverting of the Canons. Notwithstanding this Opposition, the Bishops declared, that they would go on, and the Commissioners, without any regard to what was said by the Pope's Legates, said, that all the Synod had given their Approbation to their Determination.

The Councils.

All things being thus decreed, the Fathers of the Council made a long discourse to the Emperor, in which having commended his Zeal and Piety, as well as St. Leo's Doctrine and Holiness, they related what had passed in the Council, they explained the Faith of the Church about the Incarnation, approved St. Leo's Letter, and opposed the Doctrine of Eutyches. They wrote also to St. Leo what had been done in the Council, and prayed him to consent to what they had decreed in favour of the Church of Constantinople. The Emperor made two Edicts to prevent all Opposition to the Synod. He confirmed the Council of Chalcedon, and invalidated by an Edict all that had been done against Flavian. He gave a check to the boldness of the Monks of Alexandria and Palestine, who would have thrust out Juvenal from his See, and put one Theodosius in his place. He gave order to punish this last.

I do not pursue the Story of the Troubles, raised after the Death of Marcian, about the Council of Chalcedon, because it would draw me too far from my Subject. I shall only observe, that the Emperor Leo having consulted the Church about this Difference, they held several Councils in the Provinces, who wrote those Letters to the Emperor, which make up that Collection called Codex Encyclicus, which is reckoned the third Part of the Acts of the Council of Chalcedon.

Of the Council of Ries, Held in 439.

of Ries.

WE were not willing to interrupt the Connexion of the History of the Councils of Chalcedon and Ephesus, because these two Councils have a near Relation one to another. We will now resume our discourse of the private Councils.

The Council of Ries in France, and not Rhegium in Italy was called to examine the Ordination of Armentarius, who had been ordained Bishop of Ebredunum. This Armentarius was a Young Man, but a Person of Quality, who being led by the Advice of his Friends, was ordained Bishop of Ebredunum by two Bishops, without the consent of the Bishops of the Province, or of the Metropolitan; but afterward acknowledging his fault withdrew himself, renounced his Episcopal Charge, and desired that his Name might be razed out of the number of the Bishops of Ebredunum. Hilarius Bishop of Arles, and twelve other Bishops of France were present at this Council. They declared, That the Ordination of Armentarius was Null, according to the Canons; that the two Bishops who performed it, and who begged pardon for their fault, should for the future never be present at any Synod, or Ordination. As to Armentarius, that they might be favourable to him, they granted him, according to the eighth Canon of the Council of Nice, that he should have the Title of a Suffragan Bishop, or to enjoy the Communion granted to Strangers, but upon Condition. 1. That he shall dwell in some other Province than that of the Sea-Alpes; and if he returns thither, he shall be liable to all the punishments his Action deserves. 2. That if he be met in any place that is not public, he shall claim no other place, nor title, than what his Quality in the world gives him. 3. That he shall have no power to ordain any Clergy-man, nor celebrate the Sacrament in any Church whatsoever, unless any be given to him out of Charity. 4. That it shall not be lawful for any Bishop to give place to him, as the more ancient. 5. That he shall not do any Office at a distance from the Church assigned him, and shall only have a Right to confirm Novices, and celebrate Sacraments before the Priests. They granted him also power to pronounce the Blessings in the Church, which Priests only have in private places; to consecrate Virgins in the Church, wherein he shall acknowledge himself Inferior to Bishops, but Superior to Priests. That if he changes his Church, he shall not be received in the second, unless he renounce the first. As to the Ministers which he hath ordained, the Bishop of Ebredunum shall be left at Liberty, whether he will own them, or reject them.

of Ries.

For prevention of the like disorder for the Future, they forbid any Bishop going to a vacant Church, unless it be the next Neighbouring Bishop, who ought to go as a Visitor to order all things at the Bishops interment, that is to say, till the 7th. day after his decease, but must afterward immediately withdraw himself; and wait the Order of the Metropolitan to come thither with other Bishops: Strictly forbidding all other Bishops to enter upon a Vacant Church, unless they are invited by the Letters of the Metropolitan. Then they revived the fifth Canon of the Council of Nice concerning Provincial Councils.

The First Council of Orange.

The first of Orange.

THIS Council was held Anno. 441. at Orange, or near that City. Hilarius Bishop of Arles was President in it, and sixteen other Bishops assisted at it.

In the first Canon of this Council it is ordained, That Priests might confirm in the absence of the Bishops, such Hereticks, as being in danger of Death desire admission into the Church, by Chrism, and Blessing of them.

The first of Orange.

The second Canon, which is not without reason put in the first place in most MSS, hath been the subject of a famous contest between Aurelius and F. Sirmondus. For the better understanding of it we must fix upon the true reading of it. The Negative Particle which we meet with in some Editions, but not in others, makes a clean different sense. In the Old Edition of Merlin it is read at the end of this Canon, Sed ut necessaria habeatur repetita Chrismatio;

The Councils.

Grabb, and Binius have obſerved in the Margin among the different Readings, non Neceſſaria inſtead of Neceſſaria. Laſtly, F. Sirmondus hath inſerted in the Text the Negative Particle upon the Credit of ſeveral MSS, and the Authority of Iſidorus. By conſidering the preceding part of the Canon it is eaſie to know, that we muſt add this Negative Particle. This is the Tranſlation of it word for word: None of the Miniſters, who are entruſted with the power to baptiſe, ought to adminiſter it without having the Chriſm, becauſe we have a Cuſtom among us to anoint with the Chriſm but once; but if any Perſon be not anointed with the Chriſm at his Baptiſm upon the account of ſome urgent neceſſity, the Prieſt ſhall admoniſh him of it in his Confirmation, for we have but one Bleſſing of Chriſm likewiſe. After theſe words come thoſe which are the ſubject of the Conteſt. (a) Non ut præjudicans, ſed ut non neceſſaria; Or Neceſſaria habeatur repetita Chriſmatio. Now it is eaſie to ſee by the preceding Words, that the Senſe requires the Negative Particle, without which the Canon would contradict it ſelf. And now having fixed the Reading of the Canon, it is neceſſary for the Explication of it to obſerve that in the beginning of the Church Baptiſm was always accompanied with Chriſm and Impoſition of Hands, as appears evidently by Tertullian; but that afterwards, when they began to ſeparate Impoſition of Hands, or Confirmation from Baptiſm, there were different uſages of Confirmation or Unction. Some joyned it with Baptiſm, others with Impoſitions, and ſome others repeated it. In the Church of Rome there was a double Unction as is evident from St. Innocent's Letter, but the Church of France followed a quite different Cuſtom as appears by this Canon, which proves, that they uſed but one Unction which was joyned with Baptiſm, and did not repeat it at Confirmation; but when it was omitted in Baptiſm they adminiſtred it at Confirmation. This is the true Senſe of the Canon.

In the third Canon it is ordered, that thoſe, who find themſelves dangerouſly ſick, when they are under Penance, ſhall be received into Communion, without the Impoſition of Hands, in token of their Reconciliation; but if they recover, they ſhall ſtill continue in a ſtate of Penance, till they have compleated it, and then ſhall be received to Communion by Impoſition of Hands, as Perſons reconciled. This Communion without Impoſition of Hands in token of Reconciliation, is in the judgment of ſome, the Euchariſt without Abſolution; according to others a private Abſolution without the Euchariſt. I rather think that this Communion conſiſted in nothing but in ſome bare marks, which the Church gave to ſhew, that they received the Sick Perſon into her Communion, without giving him Abſolution. This Canon muſt be explained by the Canons of other Councils, becauſe the Biſhops who made it, ſay that they grant this Communion according to the definitions of the Holy Fathers, who have called this Communion a Viaticum, which relates to the 13th. Canon of the Council of Nice, where it is ſaid, that they ſhall give dying Perſons their laſt Viaticum, as the moſt neceſſary thing, which makes it evident, that the Communion of the Church is only meant. This is the Reaſon, that the Council adds, that when they deſire the Euchariſt, the Biſhop ſhall not give it them, till he hath examined the Diſpoſition of him that demands it, which ſhews, that the Church did grant to Penitents, who were at the point of Death, the Communion of the Church, without giving them the Sacrament, with an Injunction to perform their Penance, when they are recovered.

In the fourth Canon it is decreed, that if a Clergyman ſhall deſire to undergo Penance, he ſhall not be denied. This was ordained, becauſe it was forbidden by ſeveral Canons of the Church to put the Clergy to publick Penance. This Council excepts thoſe who deſire it themſelves through Devotion, or otherwiſe. The Councils.

In the fifth it is declared, that they ought not to deliver up thoſe, who fly to the Churches for Security; but they ought to be as in an Aſylum, becauſe of the reſpect which is due to that Holy Place.

The ſixth is againſt thoſe who detained the Bond-Servants of Clergymen in their Service, by way of Repriſal, inſtead of their own, who were fled into the Church.

The ſeventh is againſt thoſe, who uſed them whom the Church had made free, as Slaves.

The eighth forbids a Biſhop to ordain a Clergyman, who dwells in another Dioceſs. It orders him to make him continue ſometime in his Dioceſs, and then not to ordain him till he hath firſt conſulted his own Biſhop.

In the ninth it ſaith, that if a Biſhop hath ordained any Perſons belonging to another Church, if he hath nothing to object againſt them, he ought either to ſend them back again, or obtain leave of their own Biſhops.

The tenth ſhews, that if a Biſhop hath built a Church in the Territories of another Biſhop for his own profit or conveniency, after he hath obtain'd leave of the Biſhop of the Place, who ought not to refuſe him, he ought to reſerve the Conſecration of it to the Biſhop of the Place, who ſhall grant to the Biſhop that built the Church, a Liberty of Ordaining ſuch Perſons Clerks to ſerve there as he ſhall preſent to him, or of approving ſuch Perſons, who are already ordained, as he ſhall chooſe. Laſtly, he adds, that if any Lay-man build a Church, he ought not to take any other Biſhop to conſecrate it, than the Biſhop of the Place. That which is ſaid in this Canon concerning a Biſhop that hath built a Church in another's Territories, that he ſhall preſent or chooſe the Clerks, whom he is bound to ordain, or approve for the Service of that Church, may diſcover to us the Original of Patronages. It appears plain enough, that the Biſhop who builds a Church in another's Territories hath a right to the Preſentation; but it doth not appear, that it held good to the Succeſſors in the Biſhoprick, or to thoſe in his Family.

The 11th. Canon forbids Biſhops to receive Perſons excommunicate by the Biſhop before he hath reconciled them, and it orders that the Examination of the Juſtice or Injuſtice of their Excommunication ſhall be reſerved to the next Synod.

In the 12th. Canon the Biſhops of this Council declared, that they ought to baptize or accept their Repentance, who have loſt their Senſes on a ſudden, provided that they do give, or have given any Marks that they did earneſtly deſire it.

In the 13th. it is ſaid, that we muſt grant to the Inſenſible, Quæcunque pietatis ſunt, which is not clear: 'Tis not probable that it means the Euchariſt. I rather think it to be meant of pious Aſſiſtance, and ſome other Ceremonies. Timotheus of Alexandria obſerves Can. 13. that we may pray for a Fool that hath ſlain himſelf.

The 14th. Canon preſcribes, that the Energumeni ſhould be accepted to the Communion, who do what they can to cure themſelves, and who are guided by the Counſels and Admonitions of their Clergy, becauſe the Sacrament can fortifie them againſt the Aſſaults of the Devil, and purifie them.

In the 15th. it is ordained, that the poſſeſſed Catechumens be baptized.

The 16th. forbids conferring Orders upon ſuch Perſons as have been openly troubled with an Evil Spirit, and deprives thoſe of their Function, to whom it happens after their Ordination.

(a) This Clauſe Longus ſets down thus, Non præjudicantes cuiquam hoc dicimus, ſed ut neceſſaria habeatur Chriſmatio. Which ſeems full as agreeable if not more to the Cuſtom of the Gallican Church, than our Author's reading; for the negative Particle is made neceſſary only becauſe of the Word repetita, which is omitted in this reading, and I think it the beſt.

The

The Councils.

The 17th. is almoſt unintelligible; thus it is, Cum Capſa & Calix Offerendus eſt & admixtione Euchariſtiæ conſecrandus. We muſt offer the Chalice with the Patin, and conſecrate it by mingling the Euchariſt. The only Senſe it is capable of is this, that when they conſecrate the Chalice, or Plate, they muſt celebrate the Sacrament in thoſe Veſſels.

The 18th. commands, that the Goſpels be read hereafter to the Catechumens in all Churches.

The 19th. imports, that the Catechumens ſhall not be ſuffered to go into the Baptiſtery.

The 20th. that it ſhall not be allowed them to receive the Benediction with the Faithful, no not in Domeſtick or private Prayers; and they ſhall be admoniſhed to come by themſelves to receive the Bleſſing, and the Sign of the Croſs.

In the 21ſt. it is decreed, that if two Biſhops ordain a Biſhop alone, without the concurrence of the other Biſhops, if the Biſhop were ordained againſt his Will, he ſhall be put into the Place of one of them who ordained him, and another ſhall be ordain'd in the place of the other Biſhop; but if he that was ordained was voluntarily ordained, he alſo ſhall be depoſed.

The 22d. orders, that for the future no married Perſons ſhall be ordained Deacons, unleſs they make a profeſſion of living in Chaſtity.

The 23. orders, that if it be found out that one of thoſe Deacons do not abſtain from his Wife, he ſhall be deprived.

The 24th. excepts from this Law, thoſe who have been ordained heretofore. The only Penalty it inflicts on them is, that they cannot obtain any higher Orders.

The 25th. appoints, that ſuch Perſons as have been twice married, although never ſo worthy, ſhall be admitted to no other Orders than that of a Sub-Deacon.

The 26th. forbids the Ordinations of Deaconeſſes for the future, and orders thoſe that are already ordained to receive the Bleſſing with the mere Laicks. Nevertheleſs the Council of Nice ranks them among the Clergy, Can. 19. De Deaconeſſis, & omnibus qui in Clero cenſentur. St. Epiphanius witneſſes, that they were ordained, and the Council of Chalcedon ſays it expreſly, Can. 15. as well as the Council of Epauna, Can. 21. and Juſtinian's Novels, Chap. 6.

The Councils.

The 27th. Canon is concerning Widows profeſſing Chaſtity, the Council requires, that it be done before the Biſhop, and that it be diſcovered by their Widows-Garments, or by a kind of Vail put upon them, as it is the Roman Cuſtom, and is decreed by the Council of Toledo, Can. 4. and by the Council of Carthage, Can. 104.

The Council of Orange adds, that the Raviſhers of theſe Widows, and ſuch as broke their Profeſſion, ſhall be puniſhed.

The 28th. Canon ordains, that ſuch as break their Vow of Virginity, whether Men or Women, ſhall be made to do Penance.

In the 29th. Canon the Biſhops of the Council confirm the Decrees, that they had made, and require that they be obſerved by themſelves, and their Brethren. They reprove them that neither come themſelves, nor ſend their Deputies in their ſtead to the Provincial Synods, which ought to be held twice a Year. They give notice of the next Council, and charge Hilary to give notice of the time to thoſe Biſhops that were abſent.

The laſt Canon appoints, that if a Biſhop loſe his Senſes, or * Tongue, it ſhall not be lawful for his Prieſts to perform the Epiſcopal Functions in his Preſence, but he ſhall ſend for a Biſhop, who ſhall perform the Epiſcopal Functions in his Church. Speech.

The Council of Vaſio.

of Vaſio.

THIS Council is much like the precedent, held at Vaſio in 442. It made X. Canons.

The I. imports, that the French Biſhops need not be examined before they be received to the Communion, it is ſufficient that it be not known they are excommunicated.

The II. commands, that the Oblations of ſuch Penitents, as dying ſuddenly could not receive the Sacraments of the Church, ſhould be received and accepted; and their Memory ought to be celebrated at the Altar, ſince if they had lived, they ought not to be kept from the Euchariſt.

The III. orders, that the Prieſts or Miniſters ſhould every Year deſire the Chriſm of their own Biſhop about the Feaſt of Eaſter, and either go themſelves to fetch it, or ſend their Sub-Deacon for it, [if neceſſary buſineſs will not permit them to go.]

The IV. is, that they ſhall be expelled the Church as Infidels, who kept back thoſe Legacies which dying Perſons have bequeathed to the Church.

The V. is, that if any Perſon doth not ſubmit to the Sentence of his Biſhop, he ſhall have relief from a Synod.

In the VI. it is proved by the Teſtimony of the firſt Letter to St. Clement, that Chriſtians ought not to hold any familiar correſpondence with the Enemies of Religion.

The VII. to prevent too much raſhneſs in condemning the Guilty, enjoyns the Biſhops to be gentle, although they believe that a Perſon hath deſerved to be ſeparated from the Church for a time, and content themſelves at the intreaty of others to reprove, and threaten him; and if they think any Perſon to deſerve Condemnation for a great Crime, they ought to conſider, that they ſhould do it, as being their Accuſers.

of Vaſio.

The VIII. Canon imports, that if a Biſhop knows the Crime of another, but cannot prove it, he ought not to divulge it, but only to endeavour by private reproof to amend him, whom he believes to be guilty. But if he prove obſtinate, and will not reform, the Biſhop may by his own Authority ſeparate him from his Communion, although he continue in Communion with others that know not of it.

The IX. and X. Canons were made to prevent, that ſuch Perſons as have out of Charity taken upon them the care and charge of Foundlings, ſhould not be deterred from ſo great a Piece of Charity through fear of being proceeded againſt by Law, as it often happens, and being accuſed to have ſtolen them. The Council decreed according to the Law of Honorius, that they who find out-caſt Children, ſhould give Notice of it to the Church; and that there may be no cheat about it, the Council adds, that it ſhall be publiſhed at the Altar on Sunday, that an out-caſt Child is found, that if any Perſon ſhall own it within 10 Days, it ſhall be reſtored, but afterward ſuch a Demand ſhall not be received, or allowed. I do not ſpeak of the other Synod held under Hilary Biſhop of Arles againſt Proclus and Chelidonius, becauſe we have nothing more of them, than what is ſaid in the Life of that Author.

The Second Council of Arles.

of Arles.

THIS Council was held at Arles ſome time after the Council of Vaſio, we have 56 Canons made by this Council, of which this is the Summary:

of Arles.

1. A Novice muſt not be choſen to be ordained a Deacon or a Prieſt.

2. No Man may be made a Prieſt, who is married,

The Councils.

ried, unleſs he will renounce the uſe of Marriage, which they call by the Name of Converſion.

3. A Perſon in Holy Orders above a Deacon, ought not to cohabit with any other Woman beſide his Grand-Mother, his Daughter, his Niece, or Wife.

4. He ought not to get any Woman into his Chamber, whether bond or free.

5. A Biſhop muſt not be ordained without his Metropolitan, or his Letter, nor unleſs there be at leaſt three Biſhops preſent, and the others be ſummoned; and if there be any difference among them about it, the Metropolitan ſhall follow the plurality of Voices in the Election.

6. A Biſhop ordained without the conſent of his Metropolitan, ought not to be a Biſhop.

7. They, who not being able to ſubdue the Luſts of the Fleſh, have made themſelves Eunuchs, ought not to be received into the Clergy.

8. He that receives a Perſon excommunicated ſhall give an account before a Council.

9. A Novatian may not be received to Communion unleſs he renounce his Error.

10. and 11. The 11. Canon of the Council of Nice ſhall be obſerved againſt them that fall into Idolatry.

12. They that die in the ſtate of Penance, ſhall be received to Communion, and their Oblations received.

13. Clergymen ſhall not leave their Churches upon any Account whatſoever; and if it be found that one remaining in another Church be ordained by the Biſhop of that Church without the conſent of his own Biſhop, that Ordination ſhall be void and null.

14. If a Clergyman puts out Money to Uſury, or farmeth of another, or does any ſcandalous buſineſs, he ſhall be depoſed and excommunicated.

15. That a Deacon ought not to ſit down in the Church, or diſtribute the Sacrament in the preſence of a Prieſt; if he doth, he ſhall be degraded.

16. That the Paulianiſts and Photinians ought to be baptized.

17. As to the Bonoſiaci, who baptize as well as the Arians in the Name of the Trinity, it is ſufficient to admit them into the Church by Chriſm, and Impoſition of Hands.

18. The Synod ſhall meet according as the Biſhop of Arles pleaſes to command.

19. They that ſhall abſent themſelves, or go away before the Council is ended, ſhall be ſeparated from the Communion of the other Biſhops.

20. Stage-Players and Comedians ſhall be kept from the Sacrament, as long as they act.

21. A Penitent may not marry, or keep any ſuſpicious Company.

The Councils.

22. Perſons married may not be put into a State of Penance.

23. If a Biſhop neglect to root out ſuch Superſtitions as are found in his Dioceſs, he is guilty before God; and if the Author of them doth not amend, he ſhall not come to the Sacrament.

24. They that bring falſe Accuſations againſt their Brethren for capital Crimes, ſhall be debarred of Communion till Death, if they do not make a Satisfaction proportionable to the greatneſs of their Crime.

25. They, who having made Profeſſion of Religion, do after apoſtatize from it, and do not fly to Repentance as a Remedy, ſhall not receive the Sacrament till they have done it, and ſhall never be admitted into the Number of the Clergy.

26. Such Hereticks, as at the point of Death deſire to become Orthodox, ſhall be confirmed by a Prieſt in the abſence of the Biſhop by Bleſſing and Chriſm.

27. Miniſters who have Power to baptize, ſhall never be without Chriſm, becauſe it is a Cuſtom among the French Biſhops to give the Chriſm but only once according to the Order of the Synod. This confirms the Senſe which we have given to the ſecond Canon of the Council of Orange.

The following Canons as far as the 47th, contain the ſame Conſtitutions with thoſe of the Council of Orange. The 47, 48, and 51, are the 4, 5, and 10, of the Council of Vaſio.

The 49. imports, that if any Perſon be excluded from the Sacrament by the Biſhop's Authority, he ought to be deprived of the Company, and Familiarity of the People, as well as of the Clergy.

The 50 is, that they who live in hatred one againſt another publickly, ought to be ſeparated from the Communion, till they be reconciled one to another.

The 52. is againſt thoſe who marry, after they have vowed Virginity.

The 53d. is, that a Maſter is not reſponſible, if a Servant kill himſelf.

The 55. eſtabliſhes a new way of chuſing a Biſhop, ordering that to avoid Ambition and Simony, the Biſhops ſhould name three Perſons, of whom the Clergy and People ſhould chuſe one.

The 56. that no Perſon ſhall attempt any thing againſt the great Synod of the Metropolitan.

The Council of Anjou.

Concilium Andegavenſe.

Of Anjou.

THIS Council was aſſembled Anno 433. on Sept. 25. to ordain Thalaſſius Biſhop of Anjou. There were but ſeven Biſhops with Thalaſſius. After he was ordain'd they made twelve Canons.

The firſt forbids Clergymen to bring their Differences before the Secular Judges, or to go out of their Church without the Permiſſion of their Biſhop.

The ſecond commands Deacons to give due reſpect to the Prieſts.

The third forbids all Encroachments and Oppreſſions.

The fourth, that the Clergy ſhould not dwell with Women.

The fifth decrees, that they ſhall be treated very ſeverely, who forſake their State of Penance, or Virginity.

The ſixth is againſt Adulteries.

The ſeventh and eighth are againſt thoſe Clerks or Monks, who forſake their ſacred Functions in the Church, or their Monaſtick.

Concilium Andegavenſe.

Of Anjou.

The ninth forbids Biſhops ordaining a Clergyman that belongs to another Biſhop.

The tenth is very obſcure, the Senſe of it can hardly be found out.

The eleventh ordains, that no Perſon ſhall be ordained a Deacon or Prieſt, who hath had more than one Wife.

The twelfth decrees, that all Perſons who will be converted ſhall be received to Penance, and ſhall be granted Abſolution according to the Diſcretion of the Biſhop.

The third Council of Arles.

Of Arles.

THis Council was aſſembled about the Year 455. Octob. 30. to determine the difference which was between Fauſtus Abbot of Lerins. and Theodorus Biſhop of Forum Julii, about the Privileges of the Monaſtery of Lerins. Here it was decreed that the Clergy, who miniſter at the Altar, ſhould be ordain'd by Theodorus only, or by him whom he commiſſions, that they ſhall receive the Chriſm from him: If there be any Novices, he ſhall confirm them, and they ſhall not admit ſtrange

Of Arles.

Clergymen

The Councils. Clergymen to the Sacrament but by his Order, but all the Laymen of the Monaſtery ſhould be ſubject to the Abbot only, and the Biſhops ſhall not be concerned with them, nor ſhall ordain any of them againſt the conſent of the Abbot. The Councils.

The Council of Conſtantinople, An. 459.

Of Conſtantinople. THis Council held under Gennadius [Patriarch of Conſtantinople] hath made an excellent Canon againſt Simony. It was made by 82 Biſhops, whoſe Subſcriptions M. Baluzius hath publiſhed. Of Conſtantinople.

The Letter of Lupus Biſhop of † Troyes, and Euphronius Biſhop of Auguſtodunum to Thalaſſius Biſhop of Anjou.

*Tricaſium

Of Lupus, &c. THis Letter contains, 1. Rules concerning the different ways of celebrating the Vigils of the Feſtivals. 2. About the Clergy, that have been twice married. They ſay, that it may be tolerated in the leſſer Orders as high as a Porter, but Exorciſts, and Sub-Deacons, ought not to have been twice married. 3. They ſay, that it were better for the Clergy to abſtain from Marriage, but in this they muſt follow the Cuſtom of the Churches. As to the Exorciſts, and Sub-Deacons, they muſt not be ſuffer'd to marry a ſecond time; that in the Church of Auguſtodunum none of the Clergy, not the Porters themſelves are allowed it. 4. That the Sub-Deacons may receive the Kiſs of Peace in the Sanctuary, but not at the Altar, to which they are not to approach, but when they give Palls to the Deacon. Of Lupus, &c.

The Council of † Tours.

†Turonum.

Of Tours. THis Council was held in the time of Perpetuus Biſhop of Tours in 461. The Archbiſhop of * Bourges and † Rouen were preſent at it with ſix other Biſhops. The 1 and 2 Canons recommend a ſingle Life to the Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons. The 3. forbids them to dwell with Women. The 4. prohibits the Clergy, who might marry, to marry Widows. The 5. condemns thoſe, that deſert Eccleſiaſtical Functions. The 6. thoſe that abuſe the Virgins devoted to God. The 7. is againſt Manſlayers. The 8. is againſt thoſe, who forſake the ſtate of Penance, which they have once entred upon. The 10. is againſt unlawful Ordinations. The 11. is againſt thoſe, who leave their Churches without the leave of their Biſhops. The 12. againſt thoſe Clergy, who go without their Biſhops Letters. The 13. forbids Uſury to Clergymen. Of Tours.

* Buturigum.

The Council of Vennes.

Of Vennes. THis Council was ſoon after the Council of Tours. There were only five Biſhops of the Province of Tours, who were aſſembled with Perpetuus their Metropolitan at Vennes to ordain a Biſhop there. They made 16 Canons. They revived the Decrees made in the former Synods againſt Manſlayers, c. 1. Againſt ſuch Penitents as forſake their Penance, c. 3. Againſt ſuch conſecrated Virgins as deſert their condition, c. 4. Againſt Clergymen and Monks that go out of their Biſhoprick, c. 5, 6. Or who go before Secular Judges, c. 9. Againſt Biſhops, who ordain the Clergy of other Biſhops, c. 10.

There are alſo ſome other ſpecial Canons, as the 2*d*, which excommunicates thoſe, who marry other Wives after the Divorce of the former, unleſs it be for Adultery. The 7*th*, which forbids the Monks to have ſeparate Cells, unleſs they be very eminent for Virtue, or are ſickly, and alſo upon condition that they remain within the Precinct of their Monaſtery, and under the Authority of the Abbot. The 8*th*, which prohibits Abbots that they have not ſeveral Monaſteries, or Dwellings. The 11*th*, which forbids Prieſts, Deacons, and Sub-Deacons, who are not allowed to marry, to frequent Banquetings and Meetings, where they ſing Amorous Songs, and ſhew indecent Poſtures, for fear that thoſe Eyes and Ears, which are ſet apart for the hearing of Holy Things, be polluted with obſcene Sights or Words. The 12*th*, forbids all Clergymen going to the Jewiſh Feaſts. The 13*th*, orders that Clergymen, who are drunk, ſhould be puniſhed by ſeparating them thirty Days, or ſome other bodily puniſhment. The 14*th*, that a Clergyman being in the City, who without a lawful excuſe abſents himſelf from Divine Service, ſhall be ſeparated from the Church-Communion ſeven Days. The 15*th*, that there ſhall be one way only of celebrating Divine Service, and ſinging in all the Province. The 16*th*, that ſuch Perſons ſhall be excluded from the Church, as pretend to propheſie, and foretel things, whether it be by Auguries, or other Superſtitious Ceremonies, (called The Saints Lots,) or by any other way whatſoever. The Council dedicated theſe Canons to Thalaſſius Biſhop of Anjou, and to Victorius. Of Vennes.

The Council of Rome under Pope Hilarius.

Of Rome. THIS Council conſiſted of 48 Biſhops. They approved of the ancient Canons concerning the Qualifications of ſuch as may be ordained, confirmed by Pope Hilarius. Theſe Conſtitutions are common, and often repeated, that a Perſon twice married, or ignorant, or that had done publick Penance, ſhall not be ordained. They add, that a Biſhop newly ordained, ſhall reform what his Predeceſſor hath done amiſs. Laſtly, the laſt Canon forbids Biſhops chuſing their Succeſſor againſt the abuſe which was then common in Spain.

It hath been our Cuſtom at the end of every Tome to give an Abridgment of the Doctrine, Diſcipline and Morality of the age, which we have treated of in it; but things are ſo clear, and ſo often repeated in this fifth Age, that it is needleſs to repeat them here, having ſpoken ſo often of them, being well aſſured, that they who will take the pains to read the two Parts of this Volume with any Attention, will have a very true Idea of the Doctrine, Diſcipline, and Morality taught and practiſed in this Age. Of Rome.

[The Councils have been publiſhed by Binius in 4 Vol. Fol. at Cologne in 1606. 1618. and in 10 Vol. at Paris 1636. and by Father Labbé and Coſſartius in 18 Vol. at Paris 1672. in Fol. at large. *Fr. The Councils.

Of the Councils held in the Sixth Age.

The Councils.

Of the Councils at Rome under Pope Symmachus.

Of Symmachus.

THE Pontificate of Pope Symmachus being very much embroil'd, he was forc'd to aſſemble many Councils.

Immediately after his Promotion he held one the firſt day of March in the Year 499. to make Canons, forbidding for the future ſuch Canvaſſings as were us'd after the death of Pope Anaſtaſius. This Council was compos'd of more than ſixty Italian Biſhops, and as many Prieſts, who had all their Titles. Five Deacons of Rome were there preſent, and ſign'd the Regulation of the Council after the Biſhops and Prieſts. It contains, firſt, that for hindring ſuch frequent Canvaſſings for the future, as were us'd by thoſe who had a mind to be promoted to the Biſhoprick of Rome, which caus'd a great Scandal to the Church, and Commotions among the People, the Council orders, that if any Prieſt, Deacon, or any other Perſon of the Clergy, ſhall dare, during the Life of the Pope, to make any Promiſe in writing for the Pontificate, or give any Notes; or make any Oath about it, or promiſe his Suffrage by any way whatſoever, or do ſo much as hold Meetings, to conſult about it and make Propoſitions, he ſhall be deprived of his Office, and of the Communion of the Church. 2. That if the Pope happen to die ſuddenly, without being able to look after the Election of a Succeſſor, he ſhall be conſecrated who ſhall be choſen with a common Conſent, or by the far greater number. 3. That thoſe ſhall be rewarded who ſhall diſcover the Intrigues and Cabals which are us'd for the Election of a Pope, contrary to the Order of this Council; and that if he who ſhall diſcover them had a hand in them, he ſhall not be moleſted. Theſe Canons were read by a Notary, and approv'd by the reiterated Acclamations of all the Fathers of the Council.

Anaſtaſius, or the Author of the Pontifical which goes under the Name of Damaſus, makes mention of a ſecond Council of Rome under Symmachus, in which they pretend that this Pope was acquitted by 115 Biſhops, and that Peter of Altinum, who was nam'd Viſitor, was condemn'd, together with Laurentius, who had been Symmachus's Competitor. But we have no Monument of this Synod, neither is it probable that there was ſuch a one, ſince there is no mention made of it in the Synod, which we are now about to ſpeak of, nor in the Apology of this Synod compos'd by Ennodius, wherein he would never have fail'd, for the Defence of Symmachus, to alledge the firſt Judgment that was given in his favour.

The Synod which is now reckon'd the third, was call'd by the Authority of King Theodoric, in the year 501, to judge of the Accuſations charg'd upon Symmachus. The Biſhops of Emilia, Liguria, and of the Country of Venice, went to Ravenna, and enquir'd of the King, for what cauſe he call'd them together: He anſwer'd them, That it had been reported to him, that Symmachus was accuſ'd of many horrible Crimes, and that he thought it neceſſary to examine the matter, and determine in a Council, whether he was guilty of them or no. The Biſhops remonſtrated that he who was accus'd ſhould have call'd a Council himſelf, becauſe they were perſuaded that the Merit and Primacy of St. Peter, and the Decrees of the Holy Councils had appropriated to his See a ſupereminent Power, and that it was never heard that the Biſhop of Rome ſubmitted to the Judgment of his Inferiors.

The King ſaid, That the Pope himſelf had conſented to the Calling of a Council, and caus'd the Letter to be ſhewn them, wherein he ſignified that he deſir'd it. This Conference is, as it were, the firſt Seſſion of this Synod. When the Biſhops were come to Rome, the Pope came the firſt time to the Aſſembly, and having teſtify'd his Obligation to the King for Calling this Synod, he demanded in the firſt place, that the Viſitor who had been appointed for his Church, contrary to Order, ſhould withdraw, and that all things ſhould be reſtor'd to him of which he had been depriv'd. The Synod found his Demand juſt, but durſt not decide any thing without knowing the Will of the Prince: Whereupon a Remonſtrance was ſent to him, but he would not look upon it, and order'd that Symmachus ſhould firſt juſtifie himſelf, before his Patrimony, and his Churches were reſtored to him.

Of Symmachus.

The Synod being aſſembled a third time in the Chappel of the Palace, it was deſir'd that the Libel might be receiv'd, which contain'd the Articles whereof Symmachus was accus'd; but here the Council found two Difficulties: The firſt was, That therein it was alledg'd, that the Crimes whereof Symmachus was accus'd, had been prov'd before the King, which could not be, ſince he had order'd them to judge of them. The ſecond was, That in this Libel it was deſir'd, that Symmachus ſhould be condemn'd to give up his Slaves, that ſo he might be convicted by their Depoſitions of the Crimes wherewith he was charg'd. This Propoſition appear'd contrary to the Canons of the Civil Laws, ſince Slaves were not permitted to accuſe any Man in a Court of Judicature. Theſe Difficulties retarded the progreſs of this Affair, but on the other hand the Pope preſs'd the Deciſion of it, and ſaid, That he was ſet upon as he came, by a Multitude who had abus'd him, as appear'd by his Wounds, and that he ſhould have been kill'd if the King's Officers had not reliev'd him. This Seſſion paſt in confuſion, without being able to do any thing. 'Twas reſolv'd to go again and wait upon the King, and inform him how the matter ſtood. The Deputies at the ſame time told him, That the Pope had declar'd, that hitherto he was willing to offer himſelf to the Judgment of the Synod, but at preſent it was not ſafe for him to come thither, after he had been in ſo great danger of his Life: That the King might do what he pleas'd in this Caſe, but the Synod could not force him to come thither according to the Canons of the Councils. The King made anſwer, That it concern'd the Synod to conſider what they had to do; for his part he would not interpoſe in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, but only ſhew all due reſpect to the Determinations of the Biſhops; that he would leave the Biſhops at their liberty to decide this Cauſe, or let it alone, provided they reſtor'd Peace to the City of Rome. The Biſhops having receiv'd his Orders thought that they had nothing more to do but exhort the Romans to Peace: And for this end they ſent Deputies to the Senate which was againſt Symmachus, and remonſtrate to them the dangerous conſequences of urging Pope Symmachus to extremities, and exhort them to re-unite themſelves unto him. After which they declar'd in a fourth and laſt Seſſion, That Pope Symmachus, the Biſhop of the Holy Apoſtolical See, againſt whom many Articles of Accuſation had been propos'd, ſhould be acquitted and diſcharg'd from theſe Accuſations in regard of Men (for with reſpect to God the Judgment of them was left to him) and that he ſhall freely perform his Office in all the Churches of his Juriſdiction; and that in conſequence of the Prince's Declaration, ration, they exhorted all the Faithful to return to his Communion, and embrace Peace, reserving the Judgment of the Justice of this Cause to God. As to his Clergy, who had separated from him and made a Schism, 'tis ordain'd, That upon their making satisfaction to him, he shall pardon them, and restore them to their Offices; but that those who for the future should dare to celebrate in any place without communicating with him, should be excommunicated and treated as Schismaticks.

This is what is contain'd in the Acts of this Council, after which follow the Monuments which concern the Council. The first is a Letter of Theodoric to the Council, written after the second Session, dated the ninth of August: The second is another Letter to the same Bishops, written the 28th. of the same Month: The third is the Relation of the Council after the third Session, when the Pope had declar'd that he would come no more to the Council: The fourth is the Answer of Theodoric, wherein he exhorts them to determine the Pope's Affair, but leaving them at Liberty to do in it as they should think fit, provided they restor'd Peace to Rome. This Letter is dated the last of September. The last is a Memorial of Instructions given to him whom the King sent in his Name to the Council. The Dates of these Monuments serve to fix the Epocha's of the four Assemblies we have spoken of. The Council was call'd about the end of June 501. The Bishops having come by Ravenna, where they saw the King, and held their first Assembly, came to Rome in the Month of July, and held there their second Session. The third Meeting where the Pope was present the second time, was held the first of September. The last was held on the 21st of October, which is the day of the Date of the Acts, or according to another Manuscript on the 13th. of the same Month. From whence you may presently perceive why this is call'd Synodus quarta in the Council of Rome, which approv'd the Discourse which Ennodius wrote in Defence of this Synod, since it was the fourth Assembly held about this Cause. It is also call'd Palmaris, perhaps because the Bishops carried in it what they had a mind to.

The Decision of this Synod was differently receiv'd: On one side the Enemies of Symmachus blam'd it, and wrote a Discourse on purpose to condemn it, where they call'd it, The Synod of the absurd Absolution; on the other side, some Bishops thinking that a particular Council of Italian Bishops, had no Power to give a Sentence of Absolution to the Pope, blam'd them for doing it, tho' in very respectful words. The Discourse of Symmachus's Enemies was refuted by Ennodius, and the Complaint of his Complices, is contain'd in a Letter which Avitus Bishop of Vienna wrote upon this Subject in his own Name, and in the Name of all the other Bishops of his Country to the Senators of Rome.

The Councils.

The next year there was held another Council at Rome on the sixth of November, wherein the Pope presided. In it was examin'd a Decree which was made in the time of the Pope Simplicius, by Basil the Pretorian Præfect, who represented also King Odoacer. This Decree contain'd three Canons: 1. That the Bishop of Rome should not be chosen without the knowledge and consent of the Sovereign. 2. That the Bishops of Rome should be forbidden under the Penalty of an Anathema, to alienate any part of the Ecclesiastical Revenues, and that if they should make any such Alienation, it should be null and void. 3. That the precious Moveables and superfluous Ornaments of Churches should be sold, and the price of them distributed among the Poor.

The Council blames the first of these Canons by itself; as to the others, it rejects them as an Attempt made by a Lay-man against Ecclesiastical Authority, and against the Privileges of the Holy See, whose Primacy was subverted by them: But in this Council some Canons were made which amount to the same thing. In it the Pope is forbidden to alienate for ever, or for any certain time, the Possessions of his Church; he is only permitted to lease some Houses whose Repairs were a burden to the Church; the same Prohibition is made to Priests and other Clergy-men, even with respect to things that are moveable; an Anathema also is pronounc'd against those who shall consent to these Alienations, or accept them, and all Ecclesiastical Persons are permitted to oppose them.

In the Year 503 there was also a Synod held at Rome, wherein that Discourse is approv'd, which Ennodius wrote in Defence of the Assembly which absolv'd Pope Symmachus. In it is confirm'd what was done in this Council, and the Sheep are forbidden to rebel against their Pastor. There also a Canon was made, That a Bishop being depriv'd of his Possessions before he is condemn'd cannot be delated to a Council, until that be restor'd which was taken from him, and he be restor'd to the same Condition wherein he was before his Accusation. These Canons being propos'd by the Pope, were approv'd by the Acclamations of the Council, according to the Custom of that time.

The last Council held under Pope Symmachus, was on the last day of September in the Year 504. It pronounced many Anathema's and Curses against those who invaded the Possessions of the Church.

Of the Council of Agatha.

Of Agatha.

THIS Council was held in the Year 506, on the 10th. or 11th. of September, under Alaricus King of the Goths, who at that time were Masters of Gallia Aquitanica. Cæsarius Bishop of Arles was at the begining of this Council, together with the Archbishops of Bourdeaux, * of the Province of Auch, of Bourges and Tholouse. The Bishop of Agatha, in whose City the Council was held, follow'd immediately with eighteen Bishops, seven Priests deputed from as many Bishops, and two Deacons also deputed from two other Bishops. These Prelates being assembled by the permission of Alaricus in the Church of St. Andrew of Agatha, after having pray'd for King Alaricus, made many Canons about Discipline.

* Augusta Auscorum.

The first renews the Prohibitions of the ancient Canons about the Ordinations of Bigamists, and of those who had married Widows. It permits those who are already ordain'd Priests or Deacons, tho' they be Bigamists, or married to Widows, to retain the Name of their Order, but deprives them of the Exercise of their Function.

Of Agatha.

The second contains, that disobedient Clergy-men shall be punish'd by the Bishop, and that if any be found who through the pride of their Spirit despise the Communion, and neglect to assist at Church, and to do their Office there, they shall be reduc'd to the Communion of Strangers; provided nevertheless that when they shall do Penance, and be reformed, they shall be matriculated again in the Church, and restor'd to their Dignity. This Canon is one of those which speaks of the Communion of Strangers, Communio peregrina. I think it was the station which was given to Strangers, who call'd themselves Clergy-men, and could not prove it by their literæ formatæ: An honourable place was allow'd them above the Laity, but under the Clergy of the Church who were of the same Rank. As for Example; if this Stranger call'd himself a Bishop, he was put below the Bishops who were known to be such, and above the Priests: If he call'd himself a Priest, he was plac'd the last of the Priests, and immediately before the Deacons. According to this

The Councils.

Notion it will be eaſie to conceive what it was to reduce one to the Communion of Strangers.

In the third Canon it is ordain'd, that if the Biſhops excommunicate any innocent Perſons, or thoſe whoſe Faults are very ſlight, and will not receive them, tho' they importunately deſire it, they ſhall be admoniſh'd by the neighbouring Biſhops to do it; and if they will not yield to this Advice, the other Biſhops may grant the Communion to ſuch Perſons, until ſuch time as a Council do meet; leſt theſe excommunicated Perſons happening to die, ſhould increaſe his Sin who excommunicated them. This is an Exception to the general Rule, which forbids Biſhops to receive thoſe who have been excommunicated by their Brethren.

The fourth Canon declares, that the Clergy or Secular Perſons who ſhall take or retain ſuch things, as are given by Teſtament, or otherwiſe, to Churches or Monaſteries, ſhall be ſeparated from the Church, and look'd upon as Murderers of the Poor, Necatores pauperum.

The fifth reduces alſo to the Communion of Strangers, a Clergyman who ſhall take any thing from the Church.

The ſixth declares, that ſuch things as are given to Biſhops by Strangers, ought to be look'd upon as the Goods of the Church, becauſe it is to be preſum'd that thoſe who make theſe Donations, do it for the Good of their Soul, pro redemptione animæ ſuæ; and that 'tis juſt, that as the Biſhop enjoys what is given to the Church, ſo what is given to the Biſhop ſhould belong to the Church: Nevertheleſs it excepts ſuch things as are given in Truſt, whether to the Biſhop or to the Church.

The ſeventh forbids to alienate the Revenues of the Church, and if there be any neceſſity, that then this ſhall be prov'd in the preſence of two or three neighbouring Biſhops, and atteſted by their Subſcription. Nevertheleſs it allows the Biſhop to give Liberty to Slaves, to grant them ſome little Pittance, and to diſpoſe of the Profits of ſuch things as are of little conſequence.

The eighth pronounces Excommunication againſt a Clergyman who has recourſe to a Secular Judge, to cover himſelf from the Proſecution of his Biſhop, and againſt the Judge who protects him.

The ninth ordains, that the Laws of the Popes Innocentius and Syricius about the Celibacy of Prieſts and Deacons ſhall be obſerv'd.

The tenth forbids the Clergy to cohabit with, or frequent the company of ſtrange Women.

The eleventh forbids them to keep Women that are Slaves, or made free, to ſerve them.

The twelfth ordains Faſting all the Days of Lent except Sundays.

The thirteenth enjoyns, that the Creed ſhall be taught in the Church to the Catechumens that are Competentes, in the Week before the Sunday of the Reſurrection.

The fourteenth, that the Altars ſhall be conſecrated, not only by the Unction of Chriſm, but alſo by the Sacerdotal Benediction.

The fifteenth enjoyns Penitents at ſuch time as they deſire Penance, to receive Impoſition of Hands from the Biſhop, and to put a Hair-cloth upon their Head. It adds, that if they do not cut off their Hair, and change their Habit, they ſhall be thrown out of the Number of Penitents; that if they do not Penance as they ſhould, they ſhall not be received to the Communion; that Penance ought not eaſily to be granted to young People, becauſe of the Frailty of their Age, but the Viaticum, i. e. the Abſolution muſt be granted to all in a caſe of Extremity.

The ſixteenth forbids to ordain Deacons who are not yet five and twenty years old. If thoſe to be ordain'd are married, they muſt not be ordain'd, unleſs Security be given that their Wives are reſolv'd to live in Celibacy, and that they will no more dwell together under the ſame Roof.

The ſeventeenth forbids to ordain one a Prieſt before the Age of thirty years.

The eighteenth declares, that Lay-men who do not communicate at Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Whitſunday, ſhall not be look'd upon as Catholicks. The Councils.

The ninteenth forbids to give the Veil to Nuns before the Age of Forty.

The twentieth declares, that the Clergy who ſuffer their Hair to grow, ſhall be ſhav'd even againſt their Will by the Order of the Arch-deacon, and enjoyns them to have their Shoes and Clothes ſuitable to their Condition.

The one and twentieth permits particular Perſons to have Chappels in their Country-Houſes remote from Pariſhes, and there to read the Offices of the Feſtivals, except thoſe of Eaſter, Chriſtmas, Epiphany, Aſcenſion, Whitſunday, the Nativity of St. John, and the other great Feſtivals, on which Clergymen are forbidden to read the Service in them, without a particular Leave from the Biſhop.

The two and twentieth forbids Curates, and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, to alienate the Poſſeſſions of the Church which they enjoy.

The three and twentieth preſcribes to the Biſhop to obſerve the Order of Age among the Clergy, except one of them deſerves to be humbled, becauſe he will not do what the Biſhop commands him: yet it permits him, if he that is moſt ancient be not ſo fit for buſineſs, to chooſe him for Arch-deacon whom he ſhall think moſt proper for it.

The four and twentieth renews the ninth Canon of the Council of Vaſio, about Infants that are expos'd to the wide World.

The five and twentieth excommunicates married Perſons who part one from another, without proving before the Biſhops of the Province, that they had juſt reaſon to diſſolve their Marriage.

The ſix and twentieth is againſt thoſe who take or retain the Titles of Churches; and beſides the Anathema, it condemns them to make Reſtitution for the Injury which the Church ſuffers upon the Account of having theſe Titles.

By the ſeven and twentieth, 1. It is forbidden to found a Monaſtery without the conſent of the Biſhop. 2. 'Tis ſaid, that the Biſhop ought not to ordain Clergymen of Vagabond Monks, but only of ſuch as their Abbot ſhall give a good Teſtimonial. 3. That an Abbot ought not to receive the Monks of another Monaſtery, and if he does receive them, they ſhall be reſtor'd to the former Monaſtery. 4. That if it be neceſſary to admit a Monk into Holy Orders, the Biſhop ſhall not ordain him without the Conſent of the Abbot.

The eight and twentieth, that Monaſteries of Women ſhall be diſtant from thoſe of Men, becauſe of the Temptations of the Devil, and the Diſcourſes of People.

The nine and twentieth declares, that the Church ſhall take thoſe that are made free into her Protection.

The thirtieth ordains, that the ſame Order ſhall be obſerv'd in Divine Service every where, that after the Ancients, the Biſhops or Prieſts ſhall ſay the Collects, that the Hymns ſhall be ſung Evening and Morning, that at the end of Mattins and Veſpers, ſome ſhort Chapters ſhall be read out of the Pſalms, and that the People being aſſembled for Prayer at Night, ſhall be diſmiſs'd with the Biſhop's Bleſſing.

The one and thirtieth declares, that the Biſhops ſhall employ themſelves in reconciling ſuch Perſons as have been at Variance for a long time, and if they will not be reconciled they ſhall be excommunicated.

The two and thirtieth forbids Clergymen to accuſe any Man before a Secular Judge: It allows him to anſwer if he be accus'd, and if it happen that he who accuſes him be convicted of Injuſtice, he ſhall be ſeparated from the Church.

The three and thirtieth declares, that when a Biſhop, having neither Child nor Grand-child, leaves not his Goods to the Church at his Death, all the Poſſeſſions of the Church which he has alienated, ought ought to be restor'd; and if he has Children that are Heirs they ought to indemnifie the Church from the Injury that he has done it.

The four and thirtieth ordains, that the Jews shall be Catechumens for eight Months before they receive Baptism, unless they fall sick.

The five and thirtieth ordains the Bishops of the Province to be present at the Ordination of Bishops, or at a Synod, when they shall be requir'd by their Metropolitan, unless they be detain'd by Sickness, or by an Order from their Prince.

The six and thirtieth, that Clergymen who serve the Church shall receive the Recompence due to their Miseries.

The seven and thirtieth decrees the Penalty of Excommunication against Murderers and false Witnesses.

The eight and thirtieth forbids Clergymen to go out of their own Diocess, without Letters of Recommendation from their Bishop. The same Prohibition is extended also to Monks, and besides they are threatned with ill treatment, if they be not obedient to this Advice. They are also forbidden to separate from the Monastery, to dwell in particular Cells, unless they be of noted Virtue, which has been try'd by long labour, or be oblig'd because of their Infirmity, to abate something of the Austerity of their Rule with the Leave of their Abbot; and even in this case their Cells shall be within the compass of the Monastery.

The nine and thirtieth admonishes Priests, Deacons, and Subdeacons, to whom it is not lawful to marry, not to be present at Nuptial Feasts, where lewd Songs are sung, and such things done as are unworthy those Eyes to behold, which are appointed to look upon the Holy Mysteries.

The fortieth forbids Christians to eat with Jews.

The one and fortieth enjoyns Ecclesiastical Persons to keep themselves from Drunkenness, and condemns a Clergyman who shall be drunk, to remain thirty days without Communion, or to some Corporal Punishment.

The Councils.

The two and fortieth forbids any under pain of Excommunication to meddle with Divination and Prediction of things future, whether by the Way which is call'd the Witchcraft of Saints, or after any other Manner.

The three and fortieth forbids to ordain those who have been under Penance, and deprives those of their Office who shall be ordain'd.

The four and fortieth declares, that it is not lawful for a Priest to give the Blessing to the People or to a Penitent.

The five and fortieth, that a Bishop may alienate, without assembling his Brethren, some little Pieces of Land, or of a Vineyard, which are of no great Rent, or are very far distant.

The six and fortieth, that he may also sell the fugitive Slaves who can hardly be kept.

The seven and fortieth orders Lay-men to continue in Church on Sunday in the time of Divine Service, and forbids them to go out before the Blessing, upon pain of being publickly rebuk'd by the Bishop.

These 47. Canons are certainly the Council of Agatha's, but the 25. following Canons are not found in the most ancient Manuscripts. They have been printed with the Councils of Spain, after the seventeenth Council of Toledo; yet they are join'd with the preceding in many Manuscripts. Hincmarus has cited them as the Council of Agatha's: yet there is no Probability that they are, since there are many Regulations in them about the same things which are provided for in the preceding Canons, and the most part of them are taken from the Council of Epaone, which will dispense with us for making Extracts of them here.

The First Council of Orleans.

The first of Orleans.

THIS Council was assembled by the Order of Clouis in the Year 511. and held at Orleans on the 11th. day of July. The Archbishops of Bourdeaux and Bourges, of Auch, Tours and Rohan assisted there with 27. Bishops, and made 31. Canons in this Assembly.

The first maintains the Right of Sanctuary which the Canons and Roman Laws have granted to Churches and Bishops Houses, by declaring that 'tis not lawful to take away Criminals who are fled thither for refuge, and that the Clergymen ought not to deliver them up, unless they have agreed with their Adversary, and Assurance be given to them by Oath that no hurt shall be done unto them, but if he who has taken Sanctuary retire of his own Accord, and be taken, then the Ecclesiasticks shall not trouble themselves to demand him back again.

The second gives an Exception to this Law with respect to Ravishers of Women who fly to these Places for Sanctuary with Women whom they have ravished. If they have taken them away by Force and against their Will, immediately the Women shall be set at Liberty, and the Ravisher shall be made a Slave, or obliged to redeem himself; but if the Woman ravished was willing, and the Rape did no Injury but to the Woman's Father, she shall be restor'd to him, but the Ravisher shall not be reduc'd to Bondage.

The third is also about the same Regulation. There 'tis said, that if a Slave has fled for Sanctuary into the Church, he ought to be restor'd to his Master, who is to make Oath to him, that he will do him no hurt for his going away, and that when a Slave will not go forth, the Master may take him again by force, giving this Assurance upon Oath; but if he break his Oath, and do any Hurt to his Slave, he shall be separated from the Communion of Christians.

The fourth forbids to ordain Secular Persons without the King's Order, or Leave from a Judge.

The first of Orleans.

The fifth declares, that the Revenues of Lands given to Churches by the Prince, shall be employ'd for Repairs of Churches, for Entertainment of the Clergy, for the Maintenance of the Poor, and for the Redemption of Captives: the Bishops are admonish'd to take care of these things, and threatned with Excommunication if they do not observe them.

The sixth declares, that a Layman ought not to be excommunicated who shall petition against his Bishop, unless he accuse him of some Crime.

The seventh forbids Abbots, Priests, and other Clergymen to wait upon the Prince without the Bishop's Leave, and to desire any Favours of him.

The eighth enjoyns, that if a Bishop ordains a Slave Priest or Deacon, knowing that he is a Slave, he shall pay double the price of him to his Master; that if he did not know, then those that presented him, or gave Testimonials of him, shall pay this Sum.

The ninth declares, that the Deacon or Priest who commits a capital Crime, ought to be depos'd and excommunicated.

The tenth orders, as to Heretical Clergymen, who are sincere Converts, that the Bishop may place them in such a Station as he shall think fit, by giving them the Blessing of Imposition of Hands, and that their Churches shall be consecrated with the same Ceremonies as are used to those of Catholicks.

The eleventh forbids not only Ecclesiastical Communions, but also Feasting between Catholicks, and those who having begun Penance, forsake it to lead a worldly Life.

The twelfth gives Leave to a Deacon or Priest who is under Penance, to give Baptism in a case of Necessity.

The thirteenth ordains, that if the Wife of a Priest or Deacon marry, ſhe ſhall be puniſh'd for her Fault, and parted from him whom ſhe has married; and if they will not part, they ſhall be excommunicated.

The fourteenth renews the ancient Canons, which declare that one Moiety of the Offerings which the Faithful make at the Altar, belongs to the Biſhop, and that the other Moiety ſhall be diſtributed among the Clergy, and that the Biſhop ſhall have the diſpoſal of the Revenues of Lands.

The fifteenth adds, that he ſhall alſo have the diſpoſal of all that the Faithful offer to Pariſhes, in Lands, in Vineyards, in Slaves, or in other things, and that the third part of all that is offer'd at the Altar, ſhall be given to him.

The ſixteenth orders the Biſhop to clothe and maintain the Poor, the Weak, and all thoſe who cannot earn their Livelyhood.

The ſeventeenth gives the Biſhop Juriſdiction over all the Churches which are built within his Territory.

The eighteenth forbids a Man to marry his Brother's Widow.

The nineteenth ſubjects Abbots to the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop, and orders them to come once a year to the place which he ſhall appoint them. He enjoyns the Abbot to fetch back the vagabond Monks who are gone out of his Monaſtery with all that have been able to get together.

The twentieth forbids a Monk to make uſe of his Handkerchief in his Monaſtery.

The one and twentieth declares, that a Monk who quits the Monaſtery and marries, can never enter into Holy Orders.

The two and twentieth forbids Monks to retire from a Monaſtery, that they may build a Cell, without the leave of the Biſhop, and the conſent of the Abbot.

The Councils.

The three and twentieth declares, that if the Biſhop gives the Lands of the Church to Clergymen or Monks, to enjoy them for a time, thoſe who do enjoy them cannot acquire any Preſcription againſt the Church.

The four and twentieth ordains that a Faſt of forty days, and not of fifty, ſhall be obſerv'd before Eaſter.

The five and twentieth, that it ſhall not be lawful for any Citizen to celebrate the Feaſts of Eaſter and Whitſuntide in the Country.

If any Man marry the Wife of his Brother, the Siſter of his Wife, his Step-mother, the Siſter of his Uncle on the Father or Mother's ſide, his Daughter-in-law, or his Couſin-German, and the Iſſue of a Couſin-German.

The laſt declares, That the Biſhops who will not obſerve theſe Canons, ſhall be guilty both before God and before their Brethren.

Of the firſt Council of Lyons.

Of Lyons.

THIS Council was at the ſame time with that of Epaone. It conſiſted of the Biſhops and the Archbiſhop of Lyons, who were aſſembled to judge one Stephen accus'd of Inceſt. He was convicted of it, and condemned by the Synod, together with his Wife Palladia. This being an Affair of great Conſequence, and the Court concerning themſelves in it: The Biſhops made Canons for defending briskly what they had done.

The firſt imports, That all the Biſhops ſhall inviolably maintain the Condemnation they had paſs'd againſt Stephen, and againſt her whom he married, and that they ſhall uſe the ſame courſe againſt all thoſe who ſhall be found guilty of the ſame Crime.

Of Lyons.

By the fourth, Biſhops are forbidden to attempt any thing upon the Juriſdiction of their Brethren.

The fifth renews the Prohibitions of aſpiring to the Biſhoprick of a Biſhops who is alive, and excommunicates for ever thoſe, who get themſelves ordain'd in their room, as alſo thoſe who have any hand in theſe Ordinations.

The ſixth declares, that thoſe who ſhall not obſerve theſe Canons ſhall be puniſh'd by the Council. 'Tis added at the end, that in compliance with the King's Advice, they had allow'd Stephen and Palladia to be preſent at the Prayers of the Church, until the Prayer which is read after the Goſpel. In this Council you may perceive ſome remains of the Ancient Epiſcopal Courage.

The Council of Lerida, or Ilerda.

Of Lerida.

THE Council held at Lerida on the eighth of Auguſt in the Year 524, under King Theodoric, conſiſting of nine Biſhops, made theſe following Canons.

The firſt forbids Clergy-men who ſerve at the Altar, and diſtribute the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt or who touch the Veſſels deſtin'd for a holy Miniſtry, to ſhed Human Blood, even that of their Enemies. If they do it they ſhall be depriv'd for two years of the Communion, and ſuſpended from the Exerciſe of their Miniſtry; and they ſhall expiate their Fault by Watching, by Faſting, and by Prayers, if they have a mind to be reſtor'd; neither ſhall this be granted, but upon condition that they ſhall be uncapable of riſing to higher Orders: That if in this time of two years they ſhall be found negligent and ſlothful in doing Penance, the Biſhop ſhall prolong the time of their Penance.

The ſecond impoſes ſeven years Penance upon thoſe Men or Women that murder Infants conceiv'd or born in Adultery. If they be Clergy-men they alſo ſhall be put under Penance, and ſhall never be reſtor'd again to their Order: they ſhall only be permitted after ſeveral years to ſing in the Choir. But as to thoſe who give drugs for committing theſe deteſtable Crimes, 'tis ſaid that they ſhall not receive the Communion till death.

Of Lerida.

The third renews the Canons of the Councils of Agda and Orleans, concerning Monks, and adds to them this Canon, that the Biſhop may, with the conſent of the Abbot, and for the good of the Church, draw forth Monks out of the Monaſtery to ordain them Clergy-men; that he cannot meddle with the Donations that are made to Monaſteries, and yet no Perſon can under this pretence cauſe to conſecrate a Church under the Title of a Monaſtery, to hinder it from being entirely at the diſpoſal of the Biſhop.

The fourth imports, that thoſe who continue to live in Inceſt, ſhall not be ſuffer'd to continue in the Church any longer than till the Catechumens are diſmiſs'd, and that no Chriſtian may ſo much as eat with them.

The fifth imports, that if thoſe who ſerve at the Altar fall into a Carnal Sin through Frailty, and afterwards give ſigns of Remorſe, it is in the Biſhop's Power to reſtore them quickly, if he finds them truly pierced with hearty Sorrow, or to leave them a long while excommunicated if they be ſlothful; But that he ſhall not reſtore them, except upon condition, that they ſhall not be capable of riſing to higher Orders, and if they relapſe, they ſhall be ſeparated from the Communion till death.

The ſixth Canon ſays, that he who has defil'd a Widow or a Nun, ſhall be excommunicated; and that that the Nun also shall be excommunicated, unless she part from him, in which case she shall be put under publick Penance.

The seventh excludes him for a year from the Communion of the Body and Blood of our Lord, who has made an Oath never to be reconcil'd to that Man with whom he had a Suit of Law, and advises to blot out his Sin by Alms, by Tears, and by Fasting.

The eighth forbids Clergy-men to take out of Churches by force, or to abuse their Slaves or Scholars, when they take shelter there.

The ninth ordains that those who have been rebaptiz'd in Heresie, shall be seven years under Penance among the Catechumens, and two years among the Catholicks, and that after this time they may partake of the Oblation and the Eucharist.

The tenth ordains, that those who will not retire from the Church for some Fault, according to the Order of their Bishop, shall continue the longer under Penance.

The eleventh enjoyns the Bishop to punish those Clergy-men who fight with any Man, according to the quality of the Person offended.

The twelfth meddles not with the Ordinations which are already made against the Canons, but only forbids to promote those who are thus ordain'd to higher Orders. And declares for the future, that they shall be depos'd, and that those who ordain them, shall not any more be permitted to make an Ordination.

The thirteenth rejects the Oblations of Catholicks, who give their Children to be baptiz'd by Hereticks.

The fourteenth forbids the Faithful to eat with those Persons who cause themselves to be re-baptiz'd by Hereticks.

The fifteenth renews the ancient Canons against Clergy-men who hold Familiarity with strange Women; and adds, that those who shall violate them, shall be depriv'd of the Ministerial Function, after one or two Admonitions.

The last Canon is for hindering the mis-employment of the Bishop's Possessions and Effects after his death.

The Council of Valentia in Spain.

of Valentia.

THIS Council was held at Valentia in Spain, in the same year with the preceding, on the third of November. It consisted of nine Prelates and made six Canons.

The first ordains, that before the Oblations are brought, and the Catechumens dismiss'd, the Gospel shall be read after the Lessons of the Apostle, that the Catechumens and Penitents may understand the wholsome Precepts of Jesus Christ.

The second and third renew the Canons formerly made for preserving the Possessions left by the Bishop.

The fourth exhorts the Bishops to come quickly to the assistance of their sick Brethren, that they may prepare them for death, and be present at their Funerals. It adds, that if a Bishop happen to die suddenly, when another Bishop is not present at his death, his Body shall be buried, and kept till such time as another Bishop can come to celebrate his Funeral according to Custom.

of Valentia.

The fifth ordains the Punishment of Vagabond Clergy-men, who disobey their Bishop, and forsake the Ministry of the Church to which they were fix'd.

The sixth forbids to ordain the Clergy-man of another Bishop or to ordain any Person who does not promise to continue in the Dioceſs.

The fourth Council of Arles.

of Arles.

ST. Cæsarius of Arles, having assembled twelve Bishops, and four Priests deputed from four other Bishops, at this City, to celebrate there the Dedication of the Church of St. Mary, in the Month of June, in the year 524, they made four Canons.

The first orders, that none shall be ordain'd Deacon before the Age of five and twenty, nor Bishop, nor Priest before thirty, and that he who is ordain'd, should for some time after quit a Secular Life.

The second that none shall be ordain'd Bishop of a Lay-man, unless he has liv'd for a year an Ecclesiastical Life.

of Arles.

The third renews again the Prohibition so often repeated, not to ordain a Penitent or a Bigamist.

The fourth is against the Clergy who forsake their own Dioceſs, and against those who receive them.

The Council of the Bishops of Africa held at Carthage under Boniface Bishop of that City, in the Year 525.

PEACE being restor'd to the Church of Africa by the death of Thrasimund, and the Clemency of his Successor Hilderic, the Bishop of Carthage, Primate of Africa, having resum'd his ancient Rights, call'd together a Synod out of all the Provinces of Africa, on the fifth of February in the year 525. After the Letters for calling them together were read in the Council, which were address'd to Missor Primate of Numidia, to the Bishops of the Proconsular and Tripolitan Province, and the Answer of Missor was read, and the Deputies of the Provinces were known, the Order of the Provinces was settled according to the ancient Councils of Africa. The Proconsular was found to be the first, after that followed Numidia, and then the Province of Byzacena. Those Preliminaries being determin'd, the Nicene Creed was repeated, and the Canons of the ancient Councils of Africa were read, which were judg'd most necessary for restoring Discipline.

The next day the Bishops being assembled, and finding no further matter to treat of which concern'd the Good of the Churches in general, the Petition of the Abbot Peter and his Monks was read, who complain'd that Liberatus Primate of the Province of Byzacena, had unjustly excommunicated them in Synods, tho' they had done nothing contrary to the Faith or good Manners. The Council resented it highly, that the Primate of Numidia should treat them so harshly. After this they desir'd to be under the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Carthage, and represented that they had never been subject to the Jurisdiction of the Bishops in their neighbourhood, and that they never address'd to the Bishops of their Province to have a Priest, but in necessity, and when they waited till the See of Carthage should be fill'd with a Bishop. Afterward the Letter of Liberatus and the Council of Ionee was read, who exhorted the Council to maintain Order and Discipline about those things which the Biſhops Pontianus and Reſtitutus remonſtrated to them. Theſe Biſhops had propoſed four things; the firſt concern'd the People of three Burroughs of their Provinces: The ſecond was againſt a Biſhop of the Tripolitan Province, whom they pretended to have uſurp'd Juriſdiction over a People that did not belong to him: The third was about the Title of the Letters which were written to the Primate and the Biſhops of the Province, and the laſt about the Affair of Peter. Whereas Boniface had already anſwer'd their Letter of the ſixteenth of December in the preceding year, the Anſwer was read which he had ſent by theſe two Biſhops, which ſays, that it was difficult to grant them what they deſir'd, becauſe nothing can be chang'd, which had been determin'd in the Councils of Africa; and for the eſtabliſhing of his Primacy over all the Churches of Africa, he declares to them, that as it belong'd to him according to Cuſtom, to publiſh the day of the Feaſt of Eaſter to all the Churches of Africa, they ſhall be advertis'd, that the next year this Feaſt is to be celebrated on the ſeventh of April.

The Council conſulted of theſe four Matters. As to the firſt and ſecond, they were left to be determin'd according to the Canons of Councils, when fuller Information ſhould be given of the Matters of Fact. As to the third it was ſaid, that there was ſufficient Satisfaction given by the Letter of Boniface; So that the fourth was the only thing that was determin'd here. The Abbot Peter and his Monks preſented a new Libel, to ſhew that they ought not to be ſubject to the Biſhops of the Province of Byzacena. To this end they ſay, that their Monaſtery was never ſubject to any of theſe Biſhops, which conſiſts of Monks out of all the Provinces of Africa, and even from diſtant Countries; that the Monaſtery had been founded by Perſons of great Piety, and conſecrated by Reparatus Biſhop of the Proconſular Province; that as long as the Church of Carthage had Biſhops, they had always recourſe to it, without impairing their Liberty; that they ſtill pray'd the Biſhop of that City to take care of them, and to deliver them from the Bondage which ſome would impoſe upon them; that this was warranted by the Examples of many Monaſteries, which were ſubject to other Biſhops than thoſe in whoſe Territory they were ſituate: And laſtly, that they had Teſtimonies of the Holy Fathers ready who defend the Liberty of Monks. For proof of this they cite two places of St. Auſtine, but they prove nothing which they alledge: To this they ſubjoyn a Letter of Boniface, who permits the Nuns to chooſe what Prieſt they would. They alledge the Canon made in France concerning the Monaſtery of Lerins. This is all there is of this Council, for the reſt is not in the Vatican Manuſcript from which Holſtenius extracted this. But in another Manuſcript there is found the Decree, which ſays, that all the Monaſteries ſhall be, as they always have been, free and exempt from the Juriſdiction of Biſhops. It appears by the Acts of this Council, that the Monks did not deſire to be wholly exempt from the Juriſdiction of Biſhops, but that they might have power to chooſe ſuch a Biſhop as they would; nor did they deſire that themſelves ſhould have, as it were, Epiſcopal Juriſdiction, to take care of their Monaſtery, and to ſend to them Prieſts and Clergymen. This appears by the Examples of the three Monaſteries which they produce, and by the Exemption granted by Boniface to a Nunnery; So that theſe Examples regarded only their own Perſons, and their Monaſtery, and did not give them any Right or Juriſdiction over any part of the People of the Dioceſs. In the firſt Seſſion of this Council there are the Subſcriptions of ſixty Biſhops.

The Councils.

The ſecond Council of Orange.

Of Orange.

Cæſarius of Arles, and twelve other Biſhops, being preſent in the Year 529, at the Dedication of the Church which Liberius a Nobleman and Prefect of the Gauls had cauſed to be built in the City of Orange, entred into a Conference about the Queſtions of Grace; and underſtanding that there were ſome People who had Sentiments, which ſeem'd not to them altogether Catholick, they thought themſelves oblig'd to approve and publiſh ſome Articles, which had been ſent to them by the Holy See, extracted out of the Holy Fathers and Councils.

The firſt is againſt thoſe who maintain that the Sin of the firſt Man made no change but in one part of a Man, viz. his Body, and that it did no hurt to his Soul, but left him as free as he was before, and only made his Body liable to death.

The ſecond is againſt thoſe who ſay that the Sin of Adam hurted himſelf only, or that nothing but the death of the Body paſs'd upon his Poſterity.

The third is againſt thoſe who affirm that Grace is granted upon the Prayers of Men, and deny that Grace is neceſſary to make us deſire it.

The fourth is againſt thoſe who ſay that God waits upon our Will to purifie us from our Sins, and that he does not by his Spirit make us willing to be purified.

The fifth is againſt thoſe who ſay that the beginning of Faith and the deſire to believe is not a Gift of Grace, but is naturally in us.

The ſixth is againſt thoſe who ſay that God ſhews Mercy to thoſe who will, who deſire, who do their Endeavours, who pray and ſearch, and that they do not know what the Mercy of God is which makes us to will, deſire, &c.

Of Orange.

The ſeventh is againſt thoſe who believe that Man may have ſome ſaving Thought for his own Salvation, or make ſome good choice without the Aid of the Spirit.

The eighth is againſt thoſe who ſay that ſome come to the Grace of Baptiſm by their own Free-will, and others by Grace.

Every one of theſe Propoſitions is confirm'd by ſome paſſage of the Holy Scripture; after which do follow many Sentences of the Fathers, and chiefly of St. Auſtine about Grace, which tend all to eſtabliſh the neceſſity of Grace to all our good Thoughts and Actions. In the Concluſion they add three Propoſitions. The firſt is, that all thoſe who are baptiz'd, may and ought if they will, to labour for their own Salvation. The ſecond, that they do not believe, that God has predeſtin'd Men to Damnation, nay, they pronounce an Anathema againſt thoſe who ſhall be of this Opinion. The third, that God inſpires us by his Grace with the beginning of Faith and Love, and is the Author of our Converſion. Theſe Decrees of this Council are ſign'd not only by the Biſhops, but by Liberius a Nobleman, and other Perſons of Honour.

The ſecond Council of Vaſio.

Of Vaſio.

Cæſarius held alſo the ſame Year on the fifth of November another Aſſembly at Vaſio, at which were preſent ten Biſhops, who did almoſt all take the Title of Sinners. Five Canons about Diſcipline were made in this Council.

Of Vaſio.

The firſt is, that Prieſts of Pariſhes ſhall make the young Readers, who have no Wives, to dwell in the Houſe with them, and that they maintaining them like good Fathers, ſhall teach them to ſing Pſalms, and cauſe them to read and ſtudy the Holy Scripture,

The Councils.

The Council of Rome under Boniface the ſecond.

Of Rome.

THE Acts of this Council were publiſh'd by Holſtenius from a Manuſcript of the Vatican Library. This was an Aſſembly of four Biſhops and forty Prieſts of that City, held at Rome in the Month of December in the Year 531. to receive and judge of the Complaints of Stephen Biſhop of Lariſſa, Metropolitan of Theſſaly, who pretending that he was unjuſtly depriv'd and turn'd out of his Biſhoprick by Epiphanius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, implor'd the Aid of the Holy See. In the firſt Seſſion, which was held the 7th. day of December, he preſented two Libels addreſs'd to Pope Boniface, wherein he declares, that he was choſen Biſhop of Lariſſa, after the death of Proclus his Predeceſſor, by the Election of the People and Clergy, and ordain'd by the Metropolitan, and by thoſe whoſe Preſence was neceſſary; that he had the beſt Teſtimony of the three whom the People choſe; that Probianus Biſhop of Demetrias, and all the Biſhops of the Province had commended and approved this Choice; that his Clergy and Church had teſtified themſelves to be well ſatisfied with his Government; that notwithſtanding this the ſame Probianus Biſhop of Demetrias, for what Reaſons he cannot tell, together with Anthony the Steward of his Church, and ſome other Biſhops who had ſign'd the Inſtrument of his Ordination, thought fit to go to Conſtantinople there to wait upon the Patriarch Epiphanius, whom they had perſuaded that his Ordination was contrary to the Canons; that Epiphanius without hearing him, and without any Proof of what was alledg'd againſt him, had by his Letters ſuſpended him from his Sacerdotal Function, and forbidden the Biſhops and Clergy of Theſſaly to communicate with him; that theſe Orders were addreſs'd to the Governor Andrew, who had read and executed them in his Abſence; that he came alſo to Theſſalonica, where he was to ſignifie them to him; that he had deſir'd to be referr'd to the Judgment of the Holy Apoſtolick See, but without any regard to this deſire, he had been carried by Force to Conſtantinople, where he ſhould have been made Priſoner, if he had not found ſome Perſons to be his Sureties; that Epiphanius, having aſſembled a Synod of Biſhops who were at Conſtantinople, had oblig'd him to appear there; that he had again deſir'd to be remitted to the Judgment of the Holy See, according to the Cuſtom of his Province; that he had remonſtrated; that it was unjuſt to violate the Authority which Jeſus Chriſt and the Canons had given to the Holy See, and which Cuſtom had authoriz'd; but that theſe Remonſtrances had only irritated Epiphanius, who endeavour'd by this means to eſtabliſh his Juriſdiction over Theſſaly; that he had continued the Proceſs againſt him, and condemn'd him, tho' there was no Proof againſt him; that he had deſir'd that this Sentence might not be executed, until he had acquainted the Holy See with it, but this Remonſtrance was very ill receiv'd; that his Sentence had been read to him, and after that the Wardens of the Church were appointed for a Guard to him, but ſome Perſons being Sureties for him, they were bound to pay a great Sum of Money if he ſhould go out of Conſtantinople; that he had fled away, and was come to implore the Aid of the Holy See. Theſe two Libels were read in the firſt Seſſion. Abundantius Biſhop of Demetrias, complain'd that this Probianus the Accuſer of Stephen, had uſurp'd his Church. Of Rome.

In the ſecond Seſſion, December the ninth, Theodoſius Biſhop of Echinus in Theſſaly, preſented a Libel ſign'd by three other Biſhops of the ſame Province, who deſir'd Juſtice of the Pope, as to the Affair of Stephen their Metropolitan. After it was read he remonſtrated, that although the Holy Apoſtolick See, had the Primacy over all Churches, and Appeals might be made from all Parts to its Juriſdiction, yet he had a particular Juriſdiction over Illyria, which he proved by reading the Letters addreſs'd by the Popes to the Biſhop of Theſſalonica. There were recited two of Damaſus to Aſcolius, one of Syricius to Anyſius, and another to Rufus, three Letters of Boniface the firſt to Rufus, two others from the ſame to the Biſhops of Theſſaly, a Law of Theodoſius, which ordains, that the Biſhops of Illyria ſhall be govern'd according to the ancient Diſcipline, a Letter of Celeſtine to the Biſhops of Illyria, four Letters of Sixtus; and many Letters of St. Leo. This is all that remains of the Acts of this Council, and there is no Deciſion given in this Affair.

The ſecond Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo

THE Biſhop of Toledo, and ſeven others, held this Council in the Year 531, and made there five Canons.

The firſt concerns Infants which the Parents offer to be Clergymen. It ordains that after they ſhall have cut off their Hair, or ſhall be plac'd among thoſe who are to be choſen, they ſhall be educated in the Church-Houſe in the ſight of the Biſhop, and under the Conduct of a Tutor: That after they have arrived at the Age of eighteen, they ſhall be asked in the preſence of the Clergy and People, what is their deſign; and if they promiſe to obſerve Chaſtity, they ſhall be made Subdeacons at the Age of twenty; that if they diſcharge this Miniſtry well, they ſhall be promoted to the Office of Deacon at five and twenty; but that good heed ſhall be taken that they do not marry, or that they keep not company with Women, and that if they be convicted of doing it, they ſhall be look'd upon as Sacrilegious Perſons, and turn'd out of the Church. That as to thoſe who will not oblige themſelves to obſerve Celibacy, they ſhall be left to their liberty; but that they ſhall not be promoted to Holy Orders, until ſuch time as they renounce the uſe of Marriage, after they are arriv'd at the Age of Maturity. Of Toledo

The ſecond forbids Biſhops to receive or keep Clergymen who forſake their own Church to go elſewhere.

The third renews the Prohibitions ſo often made as to Clergymen who keep Women in their Houſes, other than their near Kinſwomen.

The fourth is, that thoſe who build Cottages, or plant Vineyards upon the Church Lands, ſhall enjoy them during their Life; but that they cannot diſpoſe of them, nor leave them after their death to any Perſon, unleſs they be given with a Charge to pay ſome Services, or certain Rents to the Church.

The fifth forbids Marriages among Kinsfolk within the prohibited Degrees.

The Biſhops of this Council concluded with threatning Excommunication to that Biſhop who ſhall violate theſe Canons, with obliging them to come to a Synod when they ſhall be ſummon'd by the Biſhop of Toledo, with thanking King Amalaricus for the leave he had given them to meet together, and with praying God that he may reign for many years.

After this Council there follow'd a Letter from Montanus to the Chriſtians of the Territory of Palenza, againſt the Prieſts who thought fit to conſecrate the Chriſm; wherein after he has propos'd to them the Examples of Corah, Dathan and Abiram, of Uzziah and Aza, who were puniſh'd for attempting to perform thoſe Offices which did not belong to them, he declares, that ſince the Canons oblige the Prieſts of Pariſhes to fetch every year a Chriſm, or to ſend the Churchwarden to receive it of the Biſhop, they cannot have the power to conſecrate it themſelves. He threatens them therefore with an Anathema, if they undertake for the future to conſecrate it. He forbids them alſo to call in foreign Biſhops to conſecrate the Churches in their Province; and obſerves, that tho' all the Churches are united in Jeſus Chriſt by one and the ſame Bond, yet they muſt preſerve the Privileges of the Provinces, and the Order of the Church; and therefore when there is any Church to be conſecrated, they ought to acquaint him, that the thing may be done either by himſelf, or by a Biſhop of his chooſing. Laſtly, he reproves them for not having a ſufficient horror of the Sect of the Priſcillianiſts, whom he accuſes of many infamous things, which he ſays are prov'd in the Letter of Turribius to St. Leo. There is alſo another Letter from the ſame Perſon to Turribius Governor of this Country, exhorting him to oppoſe the Diſorders which we have mention'd, and to employ his Authority for aboliſhing theſe Cuſtoms which are contrary to the Diſcipline of the Church.

The Councils.

A Conference between the Catholicks and Severians.

Juſtinian being deſirous to reconcile the Severians to the Catholicks, ſummon'd the Biſhops and Prieſts on both ſides in the Year 533, to confer together about their Differences, in the preſence of Strategius a Commiſſioner ſent from himſelf. When they were met together, the Biſhop Hypatius made a Speech in behalf of the Catholicks. The firſt day the Severians ſaid, that they had preſented their Confeſſion of Faith to the Emperor; and that in it they had explain'd every thing that might raiſe any Scruple. Hypatius anſwer'd, that they could not approve it, becauſe therein they blam'd what was done againſt Eutyches in the Council of Chalcedon. He deſir'd to know of the Severians, what they thought of Eutyches. They anſwer'd, that they believ'd him to be a Heretick. He reply'd to them, that if this were ſo, the Council of Dioſcorus had done ill to receive him. They anſwer'd, that they had receiv'd him as a Penitent. Why then, ſaid he to them, do ye condemn him. They confeſs'd that Dioſcorus and his Council were then impos'd upon. Then, replys Hypatius, the Error of this Univerſal Council was corrected by another Univerſal Council. This Council was aſſembled at Chalcedon.

The Severians confeſs'd the Principle, but maintain'd that the Council of Chalcedon had not done what it ought to do. Here ended the firſt Interview.

In the ſecond the Severians accus'd the Council of Chalcedon of Novelty, becauſe they had determin'd that the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt were diſtinguiſh'd after their Union. They affirm, that we muſt ſay with St. Cyril, that he was compos'd of two Natures, but after the Union there was but one. Hypatius ask'd them, whether they condemn'd this Doctrine meerly becauſe it appear'd to them to be new, or as falſe. They anſwer'd, that they condemn'd it both as new, and as falſe, becauſe St. Cyril, St. Athanaſius, the Popes Felix and Julius, St. Gregory Thaumaturgus, and St. Dionyſius the Areopagite, had declar'd that there was but one Nature in Jeſus Chriſt after the Union. Hypatius anſwer'd, that the Writings in which this was found were ſuppoſititious, that St. Cyril had taught the contrary, that in the Council of Epheſus he had not produc'd any Teſtimony of the Fathers where it was ſaid, that there was but one Nature in Jeſus Chriſt after his Incarnation.

The Severians ſaid, think you then that we have forg'd or falſified theſe Writings? Hypatius anſwer'd, that he did not accuſe them of this Forgery, but that he ſuſpected the ancient Hereticks, the Apollinariſts, to be guilty of it; that the Neſtorians had alſo falſified the Letter of St. Athanaſius to Epictetus. The Severians added, that the ſame things are found in the Books written by St. Cyril againſt Diodorus and Theodorus. Hypatius anſwer'd, that theſe Books were alſo falſified; and whereas his Adverſaries inſiſted upon it, that they could produce ancient Manuſcripts taken out of the Archives of the Church of Alexandria. Hypatius anſwer'd, that if they could ſhew ſuch in the time of Proterius, or Timotheus Salophaciolus, they were certainly genuine; but that ſince that time, the Church of Alexandria having been in the Poſſeſſion of Hereticks, they were not oblig'd to truſt to the Monuments which came out of the hands of their Enemies; that they had plainly prov'd that the Letter attributed to Pope Julius, was the Epiſtle of Apollinaris written to Dionyſius, that Severus and thoſe of his Party would not ſign the Confeſſion of Faith, which they ſay was St. Gregory Thaumaturgus's; and laſtly, that the Books attributed to St. Dionyſius were forged.

A Conference between the Catholicks and Severians.

Here the Severians ask'd, why the Council of Chalcedon had not receiv'd the Letter of St. Cyril, which contains twelve Chapters, wherein he denies that there are two Subſiſtences in Jeſus Chriſt. Hypatius anſwer'd, that the Council of Chalcedon had not rejected this Letter, but had preferr'd the other Letter, becauſe it is more clear.

The Severians urg'd, that St. Cyril us'd the word Subſiſtence for Nature. Hypatius anſwer'd, that indeed the ancient Fathers and the Latins confounded them, but the Orientaliſts diſtinguiſh'd them, and gave the Name of Subſiſtence to the Perſon; that it is no where found that St. Cyril did ever affirm, that there were three Subſiſtences in the Trinity. The Severians reply'd, that in the Letters of St. Cyril approv'd in the Council of Chalcedon, it was ſaid that Jeſus Chriſt was made up of two Natures, ex duabus Naturis, which ſignifies, ſay they, according to his Language, that he is one Nature made up of two, ex duabus naturis unam. Hypatius anſwer'd them, that this Expreſſion, ex duabus naturis, is ſo far from ſignifying what they pretend, that Flavian made uſe of it; and to prove this, they recite the Letter of Flavian to the Emperor Theodoſius.

The Severians always inſiſted upon two Teſtimonies of St. Cyril. Hypatius anſwer'd them, that none is oblig'd to take any thing for a Rule of Faith but the Synodical Letters approv'd in the Councils, and not what a Father may have ſaid or written upon different Occaſions: As, ſays he, we muſt be guided by the Deciſion of the Apoſtles in the Council of Jeruſalem, and not by what every Apoſtle might write or practiſe before this common Deciſion; that in the Letter of St. Cyril to Neſtorius, the Union of the two Natures without Confuſion or Mixture was eſtabliſh'd; that in his Letter to the Orientaliſts he had approv'd their Declaration, which clearly contains the diſtinction of the two Natures after their Union; that it was more reaſonable to give credit to theſe publick Letters, than to ſome private Letters which might eaſily be corrupted. The Severians did not omit to produce the Letter to Eulogius, and that which is addreſs'd to his Succeſſor, and Hypatius explain'd them, proteſting always that he did not receive them for genuine. After this another Queſtion was debated. The Severians complain'd that the Names of Councils were put into the Diptyches, they ſaid that this tended only to increaſe the Diviſion. Hypatius anſwer'd that this would do no hurt; that ſince the Names of particular Bishops were recited in them, it was but juſt that thoſe of Councils ſhould be plac'd in them, and that this could offend none but Hereticks. The Severians ſaid againſt the Council of Chalcedon, that it had receiv'd Ibas and Theodoret. Hypatius anſwer'd that it had not done it till they had pronounc'd an Anathema againſt Neſtorius: and whereas the Severians alledged that they did it only to deceive them, and that immediately after they relaps'd. Hypatius anſwer'd, that if they condemn the Council of Chalcedon upon this account, they muſt alſo condemn that of Nice, for receiving Euſebius and Theognis; that he did not defend Theodoret but the Council, which had done what they ought to do upon this occaſion; that St. Cyril himſelf had receiv'd John of Antioch, and written to Theodoret. The affair of Ibas was more difficult, becauſe he had written a reproachful Letter againſt St. Cyril. Hypatius anſwer'd, that it was publiſh'd during the Life of St. Cyril, that this did not hinder them from being reconcil'd, that it may be thought that this Letter was forg'd, that Ibas was not receiv'd until he had anathematiz'd Neſtorius; and laſtly, that St. Cyril had us'd leſs precaution as to Ibas and Theodoret than the Council of Chalcedon, ſince he had only deſir'd them to conſent to the Condemnation of Neſtorius, and the Ordination of Maximianus, whereas the Councils of Chalcedon had oblig'd them to pronounce an Anathema againſt Neſtorius.

The Councils.

The third Interview was in the preſence of the Emperor, who caus'd Epiphanius the Patriarch of Conſtantinople to come there. He ſpoke to them with much mildneſs, and exhorted them to Peace and Union. The Severians objected to the Catholicks, that they deny'd that Jeſus Chriſt had ſuffer'd in his Fleſh, and that he was one of the Perſons of the Trinity. They explain'd themſelves, and ſaid, that Jeſus Chriſt was paſſible in his Fleſh, and impaſſible in his Divinity, that one might ſay, that he ſuffer'd in his Fleſh according to his Humanity, and that according to his Divinity he was one of the Perſons of the Trinity.

This Conference had the ſame Concluſion, which commonly all theſe Conferences have, i.e. That both Parties continued in the ſame Sentiment, without convincing one another; but which is unuſual, theſe things were handled there without heat, and with much meekneſs and moderation on both ſides. Nevertheleſs there were ſome Monks and ſome Prieſts of the Eaſt and of Syria, who were reconcil'd to the Catholicks. One of the Biſhops there preſent drew up this Relation, whereof we have here given an Abridgment.

The ſecond Council of Orleans.

The ſeventeenth, that Women who have receiv'd the Benediction given to Deacons, contrary to the Canons, ſhall be turn'd out of Communion, if it be prov'd that they marry: Nevertheleſs, if upon the Biſhop's Admonition they ceaſe to cohabit with their Husband, they ſhall be receiv'd into Communion, after they have done Penance.

The eighteenth, that the Deacon's Bleſſing ſhall no more be given to Women.

The Councils. Of Clermont.

The Councils. Of Clermont.

HOnoratus Biſhop of Bourges, and fourteen Biſhops of France, being aſſembled at Clermont in Arvernia, by the permiſſion of King Theodebert, on the ſeventh of November in the Year 535. after they had pray'd to God upon their knees for the King, and for the proſperity of his Reign, thought fit to renew ſome ancient Canons, and to add to them ſome new ones.

Firſt, they thought fit to ordain, that all Councils ſhall begin with what concerns Manners and Diſcipline, before they propoſe any other buſineſs.

Secondly, they declare that one ought to riſe to the higheſt degree of Promotion, not by his Ambition, but by his Merits; that Holineſs of Life, and not Riches, did render them worthy of this Sacred Miniſtry, and that they ought to be advanc'd to this high Dignity, not by the favour of ſome few, but by the Suffrages of all: that ſingular care ſhould be taken to chooſe ſuch Perſons as are blameleſs: that he who is a Biſhop muſt be choſen by the Clergy and the People, and ordain'd by the Metropolitan of the Province, or with his Conſent: that it is unlawful to uſe the Intereſt of Grandees, Craft, Promiſes, Preſents, Threatnings, and that thoſe who uſe ſuch ways ſhall be depriv'd of the Communion of of the Church, whereof they would be Biſhops.

Thirdly, they forbid to cover dead Corpſes with the Altar-Cloth, or any other Linen which is uſed at the Altar.

Fourthly, they ordain that Clergy-men ſhall not be ſupported againſt their Biſhop by the Civil Powers.

Fifthly, they excommunicate thoſe who deſire of Kings the Poſſeſſions of the Church, declaring at the ſame time that the Gift which the Prince makes of them is null.

Sixthly, they order thoſe Perſons to be excluded Communion and Civil Society, who eſpouſe Jewiſh Men or Women.

Seventhly, they forbid to cover the Body of a Prieſt with the Veil which covers the Body of Jeſus Chriſt.

Eighthly, they forbid to lend the Ornaments of the Church for Marriages.

Ninthly, to make Jews Judges of Chriſtians.

Tenthly, they forbid Biſhops to invade the Pariſhes of their Brethren.

Eleventhly, they forbid them to receive and ordain a Clerk of another Dioceſs, without the leave of his Biſhop.

Twelfthly, they re-inforce the Penalty of Excommunication againſt any Perſons who marry within the forbidden Degrees, which are, the Widow of his Brother, his Wife's Siſter, her Couſin-German, or the Iſſue of her Couſin-German, and the Widow of his Uncle.

Thirteenthly, they oblige Prieſts and Deacons to live in Celibacy; and in caſe they be found to keep Company with their Wives, after they are promoted to theſe Dignities, they ordain that they ſhall be depriv'd of them.

Fourteenthly, they excommunicate thoſe who ſhall retain Goods that are given to Churches.

Fifteenthly, they enjoyn Prieſts and Deacons, who are neither in Country-Pariſhes, nor in the City, but dwell in Country-Houſes, or ſerve Chappels, to come and celebrate the principal Feſtivals of the year with their Biſhop in the City, and chiefly the Feaſts of Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Whitſuntide. They exhort alſo Lay-men that can to come.

Sixteenthly, they renew the Canon ſo often repeated, whereby Clergy-men are forbidden to keep ſtrange Women in their Houſes.

After they had made theſe Canons, they wrote a Letter to King Theodebert, praying him to ſuffer the Subjects of another Prince to enjoy peaceably the Lands and Goods which they had in his Kingdom.

The third Council of Orleans.

Of Orleans

FIve Archbiſhops, and fourteen Biſhops of France, were preſent at this Council, with the Deputies of ſome Biſhops. It was held on the ſeventh of May in the Year 538, under the Reign of Childebert. It made three and thirty Canons for reſtoring the ancient Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline.

The firſt concerning the holding of a Synod of the Province.

The ſecond of the Celibacy of the Clergy, beginning with the Sub-Deacons.

The third reſerves the Ordination of Metropolitans to a Metropolitan, in the preſence of all the Biſhops of the Province; and it requires that he be choſen by the Biſhops of the Province, with the conſent of the Clergy and People of the City, it being fit, that he who is to preſide over all should have the Suffrages of all thoſe over whom he is to preſide. As to the Biſhops of the Province, it ordains that they ſhall be conſecrated by the Metropolitan, and choſen by the Clergy and the People.

The fourth is the Prohibition ſo often made to Clergy-men of keeping Women in their Houſes.

The fifth intruſts the Biſhop with the Power of imploying the Goods that are given to Churches in the City, for ſuch uſes as he should think moſt convenient; and ordains that the Poſſeſſions belonging to Country-Churches, ſhall be imploy'd according to cuſtom.

The ſixth forbids to ordain one Deacon before the Age of 25 years, and a Prieſt before 30, and renews the ancient Canons concerning the Qualifications requiſite in thoſe who are ordain'd, forbidding to ordain thoſe who have been twice married, who have done Penance, who have Corporal Defects, or Fits of Diſtraction. This Canon declares thoſe who are ordain'd with theſe Defects to have fall'n from their Dignity, and ſuſpends thoſe who ſhall ordain them, from the Exerciſe of their Miniſtry for the ſpace of ſix Months.

Of Orleans

The ſeventh ordains, that if Clergy-men who have been ordain'd with their own conſent, being unmarried, do afterwards marry, they ſhall be excommunicated; that if they were ordain'd againſt their own will, they ſhall only be depos'd, and that the Biſhop who ordain'd them ſhall be ſuſpended for one year. As to the Clergy-men who commit Adultery, they ſhall be ſhut up in a Monaſtery all their life time, yet without being depriv'd of the Communion.

The eighth is, that Clergy-men being convicted of a falſe Teſtimony and of Robbing, ſhall be degraded without being depriv'd of the Communion; and that perjur'd Clergy-men ſhall be put under Penance for the ſpace of two years.

The ninth forbids to admit thoſe into Orders who have had Concubines.

The tenth Canon is about Marriage between Perſons within the forbidden Degrees. Thoſe ſhall not be excluded Communion who married their Kinſwomen before their Baptiſm, or who did not know of the Prohibitions: But as to thoſe who contracted theſe Marriages ſince their Baptiſm, and knew the Prohibitions, they ſhall be excommunicated until they part from one another. Theſe forbidden Degrees are his Father's Widow, his Wife's Daughter, his Brother's Widow, his Wife's Daughter his Couſin-German, or her Iſſue, his Uncle's Widow.

The eleventh forbids Clergy-men to exempt themſelves from the diſcharge of their Office under any pretence pretence whatſoever, and deprives thoſe who ſhall do it of the Rewards which are paid to thoſe Clergy who are in the Liſt of thoſe who ſerve the Churches, Canonicis.

The twelfth Canon forbids Alienations.

The thirteenth declares, that the Jews are forbidden to impoſe ſuch things upon their Chriſtian Slaves, as are contrary to the Religion of Jeſus Chriſt. It forbids Chriſtians to contract Marriages with Jews, and to eat with them.

The fourteenth ordains that Maſſes ſhall begin at the ninth hour, that the Biſhop may be preſent at the Office of Veſpers.

The fifteenth forbids Clergy-men to go into the Dioceſs of their Brethren, to ordain Clergy-men or conſecrate Altars there. If a Biſhop undertake to do it, he ſhall be ſuſpended from Celebration for one year. The Clergy-men who ſhall be ordain'd ſhall be remov'd, but the Altars ſhall continue conſecrated. The Clergy-men who go to dwell in the Dioceſs of another Bishop, cannot be promoted to a ſuperior Order; nay, Communion ſhall be deny'd to a Prieſt or Deacon, who have not Letters from their Bishop.

The ſixteenth excommunicates Ravishers, and thoſe who are ravish'd, if they conſent to dwell with their Ravishers.

The ſeventeenth declares, that the Succeſſors of a Bishop cannot recall the Favours done by his Predeceſſor to Clergy-men, but only thoſe which he did himſelf.

The eighteenth ordains, that it shall be at the Biſhop's diſpoſal to deprive Clergy-men of the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, to whom the Government of a Monaſtery belongs, or a Chappel, or another Preferment, becauſe the Revenue of this Preferment ought to ſatisfie him.

The nineteenth, that Clergy-men being diſobedient to the Bishop, shall be depriv'd of their Miniſtry, until they have given him Satisfaction.

The Council of Tutella.

Of Tutella.

THIS Council was held in the Year 550, by Order of King Theodobertus, becauſe Perſons of Quality complain'd that Nicetius Biſhop of Treves had excommunicated them upon the Account of the unlawful Marriages which they had contracted. Mappinius Biſhop of Rhetmes being ſummon'd thither without acquainting him with the Reaſon why it was held, did not think fit to go to it; and having afterward learn'd the Reaſon why it was call'd, he wrote a Letter to excuſe himſelf, to Nicetius Biſhop of Treves, wherein he approves what Nicetius had done againſt the married Perſons; but he declares himſelf to be diſpleas'd, becauſe inſtead of writing to him to deſire him to come thither, he had caus'd him to be ſummon'd by an Order from the King.

The Hiſtory of the Council of Conſtantinople under Mennas, held in the Year 536.

Of Conſtantinople

IT rarely happens, that General Councils held about Matters of Faith reſtore Peace to the Church by their Decrees. Men have ſo great Inclination to their own Sentiments, and do ſo hardly endure the Affront of a Condemnation, that inſtead of yielding to the Deciſion given againſt them, they become more obſtinate. They begin to look upon their Judges as Parties, and try all manner of ways, either to prove that they were not condemned, or that their Opinion was not rightly underſtood, nor their Reaſons fairly heard; or laſtly, to weaken the Authority of the Deciſion given againſt them. The Council of Nice had condemn'd the Arians, yet how many Diſputes followed this Decree? How was the Church toſs'd with many Commotions. The Council of Epheſus by proſcribing Neſtorius and the Orientaliſts, ſeems rather to have inflam'd than appeas'd the Difference. The ſeeming Peace that follow'd was only feign'd, for the Fire of Diviſion ſtill rag'd in Mens Minds, which broke forth in a little time after, and ſet the whole Eaſt in Combuſtion. The Council of Chalcedon having treated of theſe things with much moderation, and explain'd them in very intelligible terms, ſhould have reconcil'd Mens minds: Marcianus caus'd it to be receiv'd almoſt every where; yet this Emperor was no ſooner dead, but the troubles of the Church reviv'd again with greater violence than before.

After the Depoſing of Dioſcorus Biſhop of Alexandria, who was immediately baniſh'd to Gangra, the Emperor gave order to the People and Clergy of Alexandria, to chooſe one to ſucceed in his room. The greater part of the People oppos'd it, and this occaſion'd a great Sedition, which was not appeas'd without much difficulty. But at laſt they were forc'd to obey, and Proterius was plac'd upon the Epiſcopal Throne. But the People of Alexandria being naturally inclin'd to Sedition, would not permit him peaceably to enjoy this Dignity. The far greater number ſeparated from his Communion, and he was many times in danger of his Life, inſomuch that the Emperor appointed Guards to attend him. But the News of the Death of Marcianus was no ſooner arriv'd at Alexandria, but the People taking occaſion from the abſence of the Governor, choſe a Prieſt of Dioſcorus's Faction, call'd Timotheus Ælurus, and having carried him to the great Church, caus'd him to be ordain'd Biſhop. At the ſame time the Seditious went to find out Proterius, who was at the Font, where they run him thro' the Body, dragg'd it thro' the Streets, burnt it, and threw the Aſhes into the Air. This happen'd three days after the Feaſt of Eaſter in the Year 457.

The Clergy of Alexandria carried their Complaints to the Emperor Leo about this horrid Villany. The Complices of Timothy preſented alſo their Libel to this Emperor, which tended to deſtroy what was done by the Council of Chalcedon. The Emperor being unwilling to give the Biſhops the Fatigue of coming to a new General Council, did only write a Circular Letter to them to deſire their Opinions; and having receiv'd their Anſwers in favour of the Council of Chalcedon, and againſt Timothy, caus'd Timotheus Ælurus to be turn'd out, who was baniſh'd to Cherſona, and one call'd Timothy, ſurnam'd Salophaciolus, to be plac'd in his room. This Biſhop liv'd in Peace under the Reign of Leo and his Succeſſor Zeno: But the Tyrant Baſiliſcus, having invaded the Empire, recall'd Timotheus Ælurus to Conſtantinople, after eighteen years baniſhment, and by his perſuaſion wrote a Circular Letter againſt the Council of Chalcedon, and the Letter of St. Leo. Not only Timotheus Ælurus ſign'd this Letter, but alſo Peter Mongus the Patriarch of Antioch and Anaſtaſius. Their example was follow'd by almoſt five hundred Biſhops. Timotheus Ælurus was reſtor'd, and Salophaciolus forc'd to fly and hide himſelf in a Monaſtery. Acacius of Conſtantinople, and many other Biſhops, diſapprov'd the Condemnation of the Council, and Baſiliſcus himſelf was forc'd to recal it by another Circular Letter, becauſe of a Sedition which the Monks had rais'd at Conſtantinople.

Zeno having re-aſcended the Throne, reſtor'd the Affairs of Catholicks. Peter was forc'd away from Antioch: Stephen, and afterwards Calendion, were ordain'd in his room. Timotheus Ælurus being dead, the People of Alexandria choſe Peter Mongus; but Zeno caus'd him to be turn'd out, and reſtor'd Timotheus Salophaciolus. After his death John Talaia was ordain'd in his room by thoſe of his Party. But Zeno taking a fancy to reſtore Peter Mongus, made a Decree of Union, wherein he expounded the Faith of the Incarnation after a Catholick Manner, receiv'd the Chapters of St. Cyril, acknowledg'd no other Rule of Faith but the Nicene Creed, and ſaid nothing of the Council of Chalcedon. Peter having ſign'd this Decree was reſtor'd to the See of Antioch, and own'd by Acacius. But the Holy See and the Weſtern Church would not acknowledge him, and receiv'd Talaia who had retir'd into the Weſt. Upon this occaſion they fell out with Acacius, and were much diſſatisfy'd with what the Emperor Zeno had done for the Peace of the Eaſtern Church. This matter went much further, for they condemn'd Acacius, as we have already ſeen, and wholly ſeparated from his Communion. In the mean time Peter Mongus, who had acknowledg'd the Council of Chalcedon, to reconcile himſelf to Acacius, did afterwards publickly condemn it, to obtain the Good-will of the People of Alexandria. Acacius being dead, had Fravitus, and afterwards Euphemius, for his Succeſſors, who having receiv'd a Letter from Peter Mongus, wherein he anathematiz'd the Council of Chalcedon, was preparing to condemn this Biſhop, if the death of Peter had not prevented him. Athanaſius who ſucceeded him, and two other Patriarchs of Alexandria who follow'd him, being both call'd by the Name of John, were of the ſame Judgment. But theſe laſt mention'd, made yet a more viſible Defection from the Church, by condemning openly the Council of Chalcedon. There were then three Parties in the Church. One receiv'd the Council of Chalcedon, another rejected it, and a third held to Zeno's Edict of Agreement, without ſaying any thing of the Council of Chalcedon. This difference of Opinions divided the Churches. The Weſt ſeparated from the Eaſt, and the Eaſtern Biſhops did not agree among themſelves. The Egyptians would not communicate with the Biſhops of Conſtantinople, becauſe they approv'd the Council of Chalcedon. The Emperor Anaſtaſius favour'd thoſe who receiv'd the Decree of Union, and turn'd out thoſe who admitted or condemn'd the Council of Chalcedon. In the mean time he ſecretly favour'd the Enemies of the Council, who had forc'd away Flavianus Patriarch of Antioch, and Macedonius Patriarch of Conſtantinople. There was then at Conſtantinople an Egyptian Monk, call'd Severus, who was a cunning intriguing Man, he was the chief cauſe of depoſing theſe two Patriarchs, and found a way to poſſeſs himſelf of the See of Antioch. Aſſoon as he had uſurp'd it, he wrote a Synodical Letter to all the Biſhops of the Eaſt, wherein he anathematizes the Council of Chalcedon. This Letter was not receiv'd in Paleſtine, and many Biſhops of the Patriarchate of Antioch rejected it, being unwilling to acknowledge Severus for a lawful Biſhop. There were alſo two Biſhops of his own Patriarchate who had the boldneſs to ſend him Letters, wherein they declar'd him excommunicated and depos'd. In the Year 518, Juſtinus having ſucceeded the Emperor Anaſtaſius, gave order to Irenæus to ſeize Severus, and cauſe his Tongue to be cut out, but he fled to Alexandria, and Paul a Catholick Biſhop was plac'd in his room.

The Church of Alexandria had not yet quitted her Opinions; Dioſcorus the younger, and Timothy, who ſucceeded one another, had condemn'd the Council of Chalcedon. The laſt of them receiv'd Severus favourably, and Julian of Halicarnaſſus, who had been turn'd out of his Biſhoprick upon the ſame account. Then there aroſe a Conteſt among thoſe of this Faction, concerning the Corruptibility or Incorruptibility of the Body of Jeſus Chriſt. A certain Monk ask'd Severus, whether he believ'd the Body of Jeſus Chriſt to be Incorruptible or Corruptible. He anſwer'd him, that the Holy Fathers of the Church held it to be Corruptible. The ſame Queſtion being put to Julian of Halicarnaſſus, he anſwer'd quite contrary. Theſe two oppoſite Anſwers were follow'd with Writings on one ſide and t'other, which gave the riſe to a Schiſm among thoſe of this Faction; the one were call'd Corrupticolæ, and the other Phantaſiaſtæ. Timothy was of Severus's Opinion, and a Deacon call'd Themiſtius made himſelf Head of the contrary Party.

The Councils.

In the year 527, Juſtinus aſſociated Juſtinian to himſelf in the Empire. This Emperor was inclin'd to maintain the Council of Chalcedon as well as Juſtinus; but the Empreſs Theodora was of their Party, who ſaid that the Body of Chriſt was incorruptible. For maintaining it, after the death of Epiphanius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, ſhe fetch'd Anthimus from Trapezus, who was devoted to her Sentiments, and caus'd Theodoſius to be ordain'd at Alexandria: But the People oppos'd this Ordination, and choſe Gaianus, who was enthron'd by that Party which maintain'd that the Body of Jeſus Chriſt was corruptible. The Empreſs caus'd him to be forc'd away, and reſtor'd Theodoſius; but the continual Inſurrections of the People forc'd him to retire, and to come to Conſtantinople, whence he was driven away by the Emperor's order, becauſe he would not acknowledge the Council of Chalcedon, and Paul the Catholick was ordain'd in his room by Mennas.

Within a little time after the Pope Agapetus coming to Conſtantinople, who was ſent by Theodatus King of the Goths, refus'd to receive Anthimus into his Communion, and endeavour'd to force him to retire to Trapezus, and to make a Confeſſion of the Catholick Faith. Anthimus refuſing to do it was condemned by Agapetus, who ordain'd Mennas Patriarch of Conſtantinople in the year 536. Agapetus dying afterwards at Conſtantinople, Anthimus and his Adherents us'd all their endeavours to get the Power into their own hands, and while they diſturb'd the Church by their Seditions, a Council was held at Conſtantinople in the year 536. Mennas Patriarch of Conſtantinople preſided in it, and had at his Right-hand five Biſhops deputed from the Holy See, and ſeven and twenty other Biſhops, and at his Left-hand three and twenty Biſhops more.

The Deacons deputed from the Holy See, from the Patriarchs of Antioch and Jeruſalem, and from the Archbiſhops of Cæſarea, Ancyra and Corinth, were preſent there.

The firſt Action or Seſſion was held on the ſecond of May. The Deacon Eupheinius, chief of the Notaries, repreſented that Marianus, Prieſt and Abbot of the Monaſtery of St. Dalmatius, the principal Monk of Conſtantinople, and the Monks of Antioch and Jeruſalem, had preſented a Libel to the Emperor, who had referr'd them to the Deciſion of this Aſſembly. Mennas order'd that they ſhould be call'd in, together with an Ambaſſador from the Emperor who brought them. He preſented to the Council the Libel which the Monks had given to the Emperor, which was read by the Notary Aëtius. It contain'd in ſubſtance, that Anthimus, Severus, Peter, Soarus, and thoſe of their Sect, did not only publiſh their Errors, but ſtirr'd up every where Commotions and Seditions, and that being come to Conſtantinople, they had built Altars and Fonts in the City and Suburbs, in oppoſition to the true Altars of the Church; that Anthimus, formerly Biſhop of Trapezus, being engag'd in this Faction of Hereticks, endeavour'd to invade the See of Conſtantinople; that he had been forc'd away from thence by the Pope Agapetus, petus, and by Mennas, who was lawfully ordain'd; that from that time they had demanded, that he ſhould be oblig'd to return to Trapezus, after he had declar'd in Writing his diſowning of what was done, and had purg'd himſelf from the Hereſie whereof he was accuſed, or otherwiſe that he ſhould be wholly depriv'd of the Prieſthood; that Agapetus had prevented their deſire by condemning him, and thoſe of his Sect, and depriving him of the Sacerdotal Dignity, and the Name of a Chriſtian, until he had done Penance; that this Pope being dead, they immediately addreſs'd themſelves to the Emperor, to pray him to confirm and execute this Judgment, that the Church might be at peace. After the reading of this Libel, Marianus preſented a Memorial to the Council, which contain'd almoſt the ſame things. After this were read the ſeveral Inſtruments of the Proceſs againſt Anthimus. The firſt is the Libel which theſe Monks had preſented to Pope Agapetus, againſt Anthimus, Severus, Zoaras, and the other Acephali, whom they accus'd of the Eutychian Error, of holding unlawful aſſemblies, of reiterating Baptiſm, of invading the Sees of Catholick Churches, of taking their Churches by force, of erecting Altars and Fonts in contempt of the Catholick Church; particularly they accuſe Anthimus of endeavouring to poſſeſs himſelf of the Church of Conſtantinople. They pray the Pope to oppoſe theſe Evils; they tell him, that as St. Peter came from the Eaſt to Rome to defeat the Tricks of Simon the Magician, ſo God had ſent him from the Weſt to the Eaſt to deſtroy there the Faction of Anthimus, Severus, and of Zoaras; that he ought, in imitation of what Celeſtine did to Neſtorius, to preſcribe a certain term to Anthimus, wherein he ſhall be bound to preſent a Writing to the Holy See, to the Pope and to the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, by which he ſhall purge himſelf from all Hereſie, and return to his Biſhoprick of Trapezus; which time being expir'd, if he did not give ſatisfaction, then he ſhould be declar'd to be depriv'd and unworthy of any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, and another ſhould be promoted in his room to the See of Trapezus: Laſtly, that in order to the putting a full end to this Commotion, he ſhould deſire of the Emperor, that Severus, Peter and Zoaras, and thoſe of their Sect ſhould be turn'd out of their Church, that they ſhould be forbidden to hold Aſſemblies, and that their Writings ſhould be burnt in the Fire.

The ſecond Inſtrument of the Proceſs againſt Anthimus, is the Libel which the Eaſtern Biſhops preſented to Pope Agapetus, againſt Anthimus, Peter, Severus and Zoaras, whom they chiefly accus'd of reviving the Eutychian Hereſie. There they tell a ſtory at length, which was only told overly in the preceding Libel, of one Perſanus call'd Iſaac, of their Sect, who had tore a piece of Stuff, wherein the Image of the Emperor was painted.

The third is a Circular Letter of the Pope Agapetus, wherein he declares Anthimus depos'd, his Followers excommunicated, and Mennas the lawful Biſhop of Conſtantinople.

After the reading of theſe Inſtruments, Deputies were nam'd to give Anthimus notice of what had paſs'd, and to invite him to come within three days to the Council, to give that ſatisfaction which was to be wiſh'd, or to defend himſelf.

In the following Seſſion held on the ſixth of May, the Deputies declar'd, that having ſought for Anthimus in the places where he dwelt, they could not meet with him. Then other Deputies were nam'd again to ſeek for Anthimus, and to cite him to appear within three days.

This time being expir'd, an Aſſembly was held on the tenth of the ſame Month: The Deputies declar'd, that having ſought for Anthimus both in his City-houſe and in that which is in the Suburbs, and in the Houſe of Peter formerly Biſhop of Apamea, and in the Chappels and Monaſteries, they could not meet with him, nor learn the place of his abode. New Deputies were nam'd again to ſeek for him, and that he might be utterly diſabled to pretend Ignorance of what was done, it was declar'd that notice ſhould be given him by a publick Advertiſement.

The Councils.

In the fourth Action held on the one and twentieth of May, after the Deputies had depos'd that they could not meet with Anthimus, and that the publick Placart had been read by which he was cited, the Council declar'd him to have fall'n from the See of Trapezus, from all Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, and to be unworthy of the Name of Catholick. Mennas pronounc'd the ſame Sentence for his own part againſt him. This Judgment was follow'd with many Acclamations in honour of the Emperor, againſt Anthimus, Severus, Peter, and Zoaras, and againſt their Followers.

In the fifth Action on the fourth of June, Theodorus Commiſſioner from the Emperor, preſented to the Council two Libels, one from Paul of Apamea, and the Biſhops of the ſecond Syria, and another from the Monks of Jeruſalem, and of the ſame Province, againſt Severus who aſſum'd the Title of Biſhop of Antioch, againſt Peter who call'd himſelf Biſhop of Apamea, and againſt Zoaras whom they accus'd of maintaining the Sentiments of Eutyches, and of troubling the Catholick Church. The Monks themſelves preſented one much larger to the Synod, wherein they deſcribe at greater length the Evils which the Church had ſuffer'd by the Acephali, the Blaſphemies which they ſpoke againſt the Council of Chalcedon, the Outrages and Murders which they had committed, the Re-ordinations and Re-baptizations which they had us'd, and the Diſorders of their Life. They pray the Council to anathematize particularly, Severus, Peter, Zoaras, and their Followers. The Opinion of the Biſhops of Italy was ask'd, who ſaid, that they look'd upon Severus and Peter as Hereticks, according to the Letters of Hormiſdas to Epiphanius Patriarch of Conſtantinople, which they produc'd, and which were read in the Council. After this was read the Libel of the Clergy and Monks of Antioch to John the Patriarch of Conſtantinople againſt Severus, wherein he was accus'd of an ill Life, of keeping Communion with no Church, of invading the Church of Antioch by Force, of having maintain'd the Eutychian Errors, and condemning the Council of Chalcedon, of having abus'd and kill'd many Monks, not ſparing even the Altars and holy Veſſels, but breaking the one and melting the other, of appropriating to his own uſe the Doves of Gold and Silver which were on the Fonts or Altars, of having robbed Houſes, and pawn'd the Goods of the Church. This Libel was preſented to the Council held at Conſtantinople in the year 518, who receiv'd alſo another from the Monks of Conſtantinople, containing five Heads. The firſt is, that Euphemius and Macedonius, who had been unjuſtly forc'd away from their Sees, and were dead in Exile, were to be rank'd among Patriarchs, and their Names put again into the Diptychs. The ſecond, that thoſe who had been turn'd out of their Sees, and baniſh'd upon the account of theſe two Patriarchs, were to be reſtor'd. The third, that the Names of the Councils of Nice, of Conſtantinople and Epheſus, be put into the Diptychs. The fourth, that the Letters of St. Leo, and the Council of Chalcedon be joyn'd to them. The fifth, that what Severus had affirm'd againſt the Authority of the Council of Chalcedon may be rejected, and he himſelf condemn'd as a Heretick and a Blaſphemer: The Biſhops aſſembled in the Council of Conſtantinople approv'd the Requeſts contain'd in this Libel, and deſir'd the Patriarchs to joyn with them, and to pray the Emperor to grant what they deſir'd. Afterwards the Acclamations of the People are recited, which oblig'd John of Conſtantinople to declare publickly that he receiv'd the Council of Chalcedon, and to place the Names of the four firſt Councils in the Diptychs, together with thoſe of Euphemius and Macedonius. The Letters alſo are recited which he wrote upon this occaſion to John of Jeruſalem, and to Epiphanius of Tyre, and the Anſwers of theſe Biſhops. The Letter of the laſt is remarkable, becauſe it ſpecifies many Crimes of Severus. He ſays, that he had many times anathematiz'd the Council of Chalcedon, that he had received the Clergymen which were excommunicated by their Biſhops, that he had depos'd Prieſts who would not conſent to his Impieties, that he had ordain'd Suffragan Biſhops, and Titular Prieſts in Foreign Dioceſes; that he had permitted a Biſhop to ordain in the Dioceſs of another; that he had ſold away the Goods of the Church of Antioch to enrich himſelf; that he had mov'd thoſe who are maintain'd out of the Eccleſiaſtical Offerings, to make Schiſms and Commotions; Laſtly, that he was an Enemy to Peace and Truth. He ſpeaks alſo of a Prieſt of his own City, call'd John, who had the boldneſs to anathematize the Letter of St. Leo, and the Fathers of the Council of Chalcedon; who durſt hold unlawful Aſſemblies, and celebrate forbidden Baptiſms, inſomuch that there have been ſeen, which never happen'd before, two contrary Proceſſions of Perſons baptiz'd; who had ſtirr'd up Commotions and Seditions, caus'd a Croſs to be ſton'd, abus'd a Biſhop, and committed many other Outrages. The ſame things are objected to him in the Letter of the Biſhops of the ſecond Syria, which is related in this Council. After this were read the Informations of Peter of Apamea, and the Letter which his own Clergy had written againſt him to the Biſhops of the ſecond Syria, wherein they accuſe him of ſaying to his Readers, who deſir'd to be promoted to Holy Orders, Unleſs ye hold your peace I will ordain you all Sub-deacons, and when the crucified Man ſhall deſcend, he ſhall not pluck you out of my hands; of having made an ill uſe of the Church; of having baptiz'd a Woman of a bad Life; of holding immodeſt Diſcourſes in the Church; of entertaining frequently a Comedian Woman in private; of wearing, thro' Pride, a white Garment as a ſign of his Innocence; of ſpitting upon the Altar in the time of celebrating the Myſteries; of refuſing to baptize the Catechumens at the ſeaſon; of keeping about him a multitude of Women, and commiting Crimes with ſome of them; of perſecuting and anathematizing the Catholicks; Laſtly, of eſtabliſhing the Eutychian Hereſie, deſtroying the true Faith, and ſubverting Diſcipline. The Monks of Apamea complain'd alſo of the Outrages which he had committed againſt them. Their Libel was read in the Council, and then the Sentence of Epiphanius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, and of his Council, againſt Severus and Peter, which was follow'd and confirm'd by that of Mennas, and all the Biſhops of the Council of Conſtantinople. Juſtinian joyn'd his Authority to that of this Council, and ordain'd by his Edict, that the Sentence of the Council againſt Anthimus, Severus, Peter, and Zoaras ſhould be executed, forbids them to continue at Conſtantinople, condemned their Writings to the fire, and forbade all Tranſcribers to write them for the future, under the Penalty of having their Hand cut off. Laſtly, he does moſt ſtrictly forbid all thoſe who held the Opinions of Neſtorius, Eutyches, Severus, or other Hereticks, to ſtir up any Sedition, or give any Diſturbance to the Peace of the Church.

The Councils.

The Patriarch of Jeruſalem having receiv'd this Law from the Emperor, and a Letter from Mennas, which acquainted him with the Sentence given at Conſtantinople, aſſembled his own Council, conſiſting of the Biſhops of the three Paleſtines, wherein the Condemnation of Anthimus, Severus, Peter and Zoaras was approv'd.

The Hiſtory of the ſecond Council of Conſtantinople, which is commonly call'd the fifth General Council.

Of Conſtantinople

THE Commotions wherewith the Eaſtern Church had been toſs'd after the Council of Chalcedon, ſeem'd to be appeas'd by the Depoſition of Anthimus, and the Condemnation of Severus. The Biſhops of the great Sees were all of one and the ſame Communion, and profeſs'd to follow the Doctrine of the Council of Chalcedon. Egypt, where the Error of the Eutychians had been more deeply rooted than in any other place, was almoſt wholly recover'd from its defection, by the care of Paul, whom Mennas had ordain'd Biſhop of Alexandria; for this Biſhop having obtain'd Orders of the Emperor, addreſs'd to the Governors and Intendants of the Province, was careful and diligent to drive away all the Hereticks, and to cauſe the Council of Chalcedon to be receiv'd in the Churches and Monaſteries of Alexandria. 'Tis probable that Elias General of the Militia of Egypt, did not favour Paul's Undertaking, which made this Biſhop reſolve to have him recall'd. Pſoius Deacon and Steward of the Church of Alexandria, immediately acquainted Elias with the deſign which Paul had againſt him. One of the Letters of Pſoius falling into the hands of Paul, he reſolv'd to be reveng'd upon him, to call him to an Account for the Management of the Church's Poſſeſſions, and for this reaſon proſecuted him before the Governor, call'd Rhodon. This Magiſtrate put the Steward in Priſon, and caus'd him to be put to death, ſome days after, in Priſon, at the ſollicitation of one nam'd Arſenus. The Children and Kinſfolk of Pſoius, having deſir'd Juſtice of the Emperor, he remov'd Rhodon from the Government of Egypt, and ſent Liberius in his room, whom he order'd to inform himſelf of this Murder. Rhodon was not wanting in his own defence to ſay, that he put Pſoius to death by order of the Biſhop Paul; but he had no proof againſt him: and there was proof that Arſenus was the cauſe of this Murder. Nevertheleſs, either becauſe Paul was not fully juſtified, or becauſe he was accus'd of other Crimes, he was baniſh'd to Gaza, where he was depriv'd of the Pallium, and depos'd by Pelagius Surrogate of the Roman Church, and by three Biſhops who ordain'd Zoilus in his room in the Year 539, or 540.

Of Conſtantinople

Pelagius returning from this Diſpatch of Affairs, brought along with him ſome Monks of Jeruſalem. Theſe Monks were call'd Eulogius, Conon, Cyriacus, and Pancratius. They brought with them ſome Propoſitions taken out of Origen's Books, with a deſign to have them condemn'd with Origen himſelf. Pelagius and Mennas ſupported their Pretenſions, out of a ſecret Averſion which they had to Theodorus Biſhop of Cæſarea in Cappadocia, a great Defender of Origen. Juſtinian the Emperor being mightily pleas'd to find this occaſion of judging in Eccleſiaſtical Matters, caus'd to be preſently drawn up a large Declaration againſt the Errors of Origen, which he addreſs'd to all the Patriarchs. This Edict, which was publiſh'd in the year 541, is found after the Acts of the fifth Council, altho' it ſhould precede them. It begins with theſe words: We have often earneſtly deſir'd to preſerve the Chriſtian Faith in its purity, and to maintain the Catholick Church in peace: And this was always our chief and greateſt care, being fully perſuaded that it is the beſt means to preſerve that Secular Empire which God has given us, to conquer the Enemies of our State, and to feel the happy Effects of the Divine Mercy in another Life. Now tho' the Enemy of Mankind ſeeks all occaſions to deſtroy Men, yet the Goodneſs and Mercy of God defeats all the Efforts of his Malice, and by confounding his Enemies, preſerves his own Flock from the Infection and Deſolation which he threatens it. We ſpeak thus, adds the Emperor, becauſe we are told of ſome Perſons who have not the Fear of God before their Eyes, and who have forſaken the Rule of Truth, without which there is no ſalvation, by departing from the Doctrine of the Scripture, and of the Doctors of the Catholick Church, who have maintain'd the Orthodox Faith, and condemn'd all all Hereſies, by adhering to Origen, and maintaining his impious Doctrines, like to thoſe of the Arians, Manicheans, and other Hereticks. After this Preface Juſtinian recounts the Errors which he aſcribes to Origen. The firſt is about the Trinity: the ſecond about the Plurality of Worlds: the third about the Præ-exiſtence of Souls: the fourth, that the Heavens and Stars are animated: the fifth, that the gloriſied Bodies ſhall be of a round Figure: the ſixth, that the Torments of the Damned ſhall have an end. After he has refuted theſe Errors, he orders Mennas to call an Aſſembly of Biſhops who ſhall meet at Conſtantinople, and of Abbots of Monaſteries, and to cauſe them to anathematize Origen, and the Errors which he had noted before. He forbids for the future to ordain Biſhops or Abbots, unleſs they do the ſame. He adds, that he has ſent Copies of this Letter to Pope Vigilius, and to the Patriarchs of Alexandria, of Antioch and Jeruſalem. He ſubjoins to this Letter the Propoſitions extracted out of Origen, and nine Anathematiſms againſt the preceding Errors, together with a tenth againſt the Perſon of Origen.

He wrote alſo at the ſame time another Letter to the Biſhops who are to aſſemble, wherein he exhorts them to read his Letter, to condemn the Errors which he had related in it, and to anathematize Origen, and all thoſe who are of his Judgment in theſe things.

Mennas, having receiv'd this Letter, call'd an Aſſembly at Conſtantinople, where the Emperor's Orders were exactly obey'd, as appears by the Synod's Letter to the Emperor, reported by Evagrius, B. 4. of his Hiſt. ch. 38.

Theodorus of Cæſarea, out of hatred to whom Pelagius reſolv'd to procure the Condemnation of Origen, thought it his beſt way to be reveng'd, to make uſe of a like Artifice. He was of the Sect of the Acephali, i.e. of the Eutychian Opinions, and an Enemy to the Council of Chalcedon. The Empreſs Theodora favour'd this Party: but the Emperor Juſtinian would have the Decrees of the Council of Chalcedon put in execution, and prepared to publiſh an Edict againſt the Acephali. Theodorus of Cæſarea, being deſirous to avoid this Blow, and at the ſame time to be reveng'd for what was done againſt Origen, repreſented to Juſtinian, that it was needleſs to make an Edict againſt them, aſſuring him that they would all be reunited, and approve the Council of Chalcedon, if he would give order to anathematize Theodorus of Mopſueſta, and his Writings, to condemn the Writings of Theodoret againſt St. Cyril, and the Letter of Ibas, which was read in the Council of Chalcedon.

Theodorus of Cæſarea had two deſigns in making this Propoſal; the firſt was to be reveng'd on thoſe who had procured the Condemnation of Origen, by cauſing Theodorus of Mopſueſta to be anathematiz'd alſo, who had written againſt him, and was hated of the Origeniſts. The ſecond was to weaken the Authority of the Council of Chalcedon, by cauſing thoſe Perſons and Writings to be condemn'd which it ſeem'd to have approved. The Emperor, who did not penetrate into the depth of theſe Deſigns, imagining that he might do much good to the Church, in procuring the reconciliation of ſo many Perſons, by condemning three dead Writers, whoſe Reputation was very doubtful, made no ſcruple to promiſe Theodorus what he deſir'd. But he fearing leſt the Emperor, who was naturally inconſtant, ſhould change his Reſolution, when he ſhould foreſee the Scandal which this Undertaking would produce, did cunningly ingage him to publiſh an Edict, containing a Condemnation of the three Articles we have juſt now mention'd, which were afterwards ſo famous under the Name of the three Chapters.

This Edict was publiſh'd toward the end of the Year 545, and is related after the Acts of the fifth Council, p. 685. 'Tis intituled, The Emperor Juſtinian's Confeſſion of Faith againſt the three Chapters, and addreſs'd to the Aſſembly of the Catholick and Apoſtolick Church. 'Tis indeed a very large Expoſition of Faith, which the Emperor propoſes to all the World, endeavouring to reunite all Sects to the true Faith. Firſt, he explains in a few words the Doctrine of the Church concerning the Trinity; but he enlarges very much upon the Myſtery of the Incarnation, which he does very exactly explain, rejecting all the contrary Errors, and chiefly thoſe of the Neſtorians and Eutychians. He ſubjoyns to it Anathematiſms for condemning them yet more formally. He pronounces an Anathema againſt Arius, Eunomius, Macedonius, Apollinarius, Neſtorius and Eutyches. If he had ſtop'd there his Edict had been very uſeful, and had not been the cauſe of any Diſturbance. But he adds laſtly, three other Anathematiſms; one againſt the Doctrine and Perſon of Theodorus of Mopſueſta; another againſt the Writings of Theodoret; and the laſt againſt the Letter of Ibas to Maris Perſanus. Now ſince theſe three laſt Anathematiſms were the moving Cauſe which made Juſtinian undertake to publiſh this Confeſſion of Faith, it is not to be wondred that he endeavours to juſtifie them. Firſt he labours to prove that the Council of Chalcedon did not approve the Letter of Ibas, and that it was impious. Afterwards he proceeds to Theodorus of Mopſueſta; and becauſe many ſcrupled to condemn him upon the account of his being dead, he endeavours to ſhew that the Dead may be anathematized. This he proves, 1. Becauſe the Church has many times anathematized Hereticks after their Death. 2. Becauſe the Council of Conſtantinople anathematized Arius and Macedonius by name, whom the Council of Nice had not nam'd. 3. Becauſe the Church of Mopſueſta had already remov'd out of the Diptychs the name of Theodorus. 4. Becauſe Theodorus having taught an impious Doctrine, could not be partaker of the Kingdom of Heaven, and conſequently ought to be anathematized. He adds, that Damaſus and the Biſhops of Sardica had anathematized the Biſhops who departed from the Faith of the Nicene Council, the Dead as well as the Living; that the Council of Chalcedon had condemn'd Domnus after his death, for believing only that he muſt not ſpeak of the twelve Chapters of St. Cyril; that beſides, it was not true that St. Cyril had prais'd Theodorus of Mopſueſta, but on the contrary, he had condemn'd him; that tho' he ſhould have prais'd him, yet this would not juſtifie him, ſince many Fathers have commended Hereticks, as St. Athanaſius and St. Baſil who wrote in praiſe of Apollinarius, and St. Leo who praiſed Eutyches, before they knew of their Impiety: that the Letter of St. Gregory Nazianzen to Theodorus, is not to him of Mopſueſta, but to him of Tyana in Cappadocia; Laſtly, that the practice of the African Church authorizes the Condemnation of the Dead: that St. Auſtine had declar'd, that if Cæcilian were found guilty of the Crimes whereof he was accuſed, that he would pronounce an Anathema againſt him, tho' he died in the Communion of the Church; and that it was ordain'd in a Synod of Africa, that the Catholicks who ſhould leave their Poſſeſſions to a Heretick, ſhould be anathematized even after their death: that Dioſcorus had been anathematiz'd by the Roman Church after his death, tho' he had done nothing contrary to the Faith, but only to the Diſcipline of the Church: that if an impious Perſon dying in his Impiety could not be anathematized, then the Anathema pronounc'd againſt an innocent Perſon, if he died under it, could not be revok'd; and yet the contrary was very juſtly practiſed with reſpect to St. John Chryſoſtome.

Juſtinian did not only make this Edict, but would have it approv'd in a Synod of Biſhops, and that it might have the more Authority, he cauſed one to be aſſembled at Conſtantinople, to which he addreſſed the Letter which is in Greek after the Edict of Juſtinian. In it he teſtifies, that the Emperors have always taken care to procure the Condemnation of Hereſies, and to maintain the Faith and Peace of the Church, by calling Councils. He brings the Examples of Conſtantine, who had aſſembled that of

The Councils.

Nice, of Theodoſius who had call'd that of Conſtantinople, of Theodoſius the Younger, who had conven'd that of Epheſus againſt Neſtorius, and of Martianus who had ſummon'd one to be held at Chalcedon. He adds, that ſince the Celebration of theſe four Councils, the Followers of Neſtorius endeavoured to revive his Errors, by defending the Writings of Theodorus of Mopſueſta, of Theodoret and Ibas. He exhorts the Biſhops to examine them, and to condemn them as impious.

The Council having receiv'd this Letter from the Emperor, made a Decree in theſe words: the Council of Chalcedon rebuk'd ſharply Theodoret and Ibas, and did not receive them but upon condition that they ſhould condemn their own Writings, together with Theodorus and Neſtorius. And we now condemn the Hereticks condemned and excommunicated in the preceding Councils, and together with them Theodorus who was Biſhop of Mopſueſta, and his impious Books: We condemn alſo what Theodoret has written amiſs againſt the true Faith, againſt the twelve Chapters of St. Cyril, and againſt the Council of Epheſus for the Defence of Theodorus and Neſtorius: We condemn alſo the Letter which Ibas is ſaid to have written to Maris Perſanus, wherein he denies that the Word of God was born of the Virgin Mary the Mother of God, and reckons St. Cyril for an Heretick: He accuſes the firſt Synod of Epheſus, as having condemn'd Neſtorius without knowledge of the Cauſe, &c. He rejects the twelve Chapters of St. Cyril, and defends the Opinions and Writings of Theodorus and Neſtorius.

This is all that now remains of the firſt Council held in the Year 546 at Conſtantinople: In it there were other Anathematiſms pronounced, which the Biſhops were made to ſign. Facundus reports one of them in the laſt Chapter of his fourth Book, wherein an Anathema is denounc'd againſt thoſe who ſhall affirm, that this Decree was made to deſtroy the Authority of the Council of Chalcedon. This Deciſion being made without conſulting the Biſhop of Rome by a Cabal of the Enemies of Agapetus, could not be approv'd by thoſe who were concern'd for the See of Rome. Mennas, who ow'd all that he had to this See, did not without much difficulty reſolve to undertake it, and agree to it; but the Authority of the Emperor had more power with him than the Intereſt of the Pope. Nevertheleſs to carry himſelf fair, between the one and th'other, he ſays, that he would not ſign but upon condition that the Pope would approve what he did, otherwiſe he would withdraw his Subſcription. This was the Anſwer which he gave to Stephen the Deacon and Surrogate of the Roman Church, who being then at Conſtantinople, oppoſed this Condemnation. Zoilus of Alexandria made his Excuſe to the Pope, that he was forc'd to ſubſcribe. Ephrem of Antioch had reſolved not to ſign, but that he was threatned to be turn'd out if he did not. Peter of Jeruſalem, who at firſt declaim'd againſt the Condemnation of the three Chapters, yielded alſo. Laſtly, many of the Biſhops proteſted at their ſigning, and gave Declarations to the Deacon Stephen, that they did not do it freely. The Deacon Stephen immediately ſeparated from the Communion of Mennas, and his Example was follow'd by ſome other Biſhops.

The Pope Vigilius, who was coming to Conſtantinople, having receiv'd in Sicily the News of all that had paſs'd, and being angry that the thing was done ſo quickly, and that they had not waited for his coming before the Decree was made, wrote ſmartly againſt what was done, prais'd his Deacon for ſeparating from the Communion of Mennas, and demanded that every thing which had been done in his abſence, ſhould be null'd, and threatned to be reveng'd for this Enterprize, if he did not receive ſatisfaction. Theſe Threatnings were not vain, for being arrived at Conſtantinople on the twentieth of January in the Year 547, he ſeparated from the Communion of Mennas, and the other Biſhops who had ſign'd the Condemnation of the three Chapters. Nevertheleſs ſome Months after having gone to Prayers with the Empreſs, he was reconcil'd to them, and receiv'd Mennas into his Communion, tho' he continued ſtedfaſt in his firſt Reſolution not to condemn the three Chapters. But he had not Conſtancy enough to reſiſt for a long time the Promiſes and Threatnings of the Empreſs; for he agreed that the next year an Aſſembly ſhould be held at Conſtantinople, wherein he caus'd Suffrages to be given in writing; and laſtly, made a Decree call'd Judicatum, wherein he condemned the three Chapters, but with this Declaration, that he did not pretend to meddle with the Council of Chalcedon. Facundus and the other Biſhops of Africa, as well as thoſe of Illyria and Dalmatia, were much diſpleas'd with this Writing of Vigilius, and upon that account ſeparated from his Communion. The Deacons Ruſticus and Sebaſtianus openly attack'd his Deciſion, and every where accus'd him of violating the Council of Chalcedon. This rumor ſpreading into Gaul and Italy, Aurelianus of Arles wrote about it to Vigilius, who defended himſelf in two Letters, wherein he endeavour'd to ſhew that he had done nothing againſt the Council of Chalcedon, and degraded Ruſticus and Sebaſtianus.

The Emperor, or rather Theodorus of Cæſarea, were not ſatisfied with what the Pope had done. They wiſh'd that he had abſolutely condemn'd the three Chapters without mentioning the Council of Chalcedon. The Pope for his part was troubled, that he had brought upon himſelf the hatred of almoſt all the Weſtern Biſhops. To bring this Affair to ſome Accommodation, Vigilius propos'd to the Emperor to ſummon a General Council to meet at Conſtantinople, to which the Biſhops of Africa and Illyria ſhould be cited, and in the mean time to leave things in the ſame ſtate that they were before this Controverſie, and for this end he withdrew his Judicatum, and the Subſcriptions of the other Biſhops, and he reſolved that no more ſhould be ſaid of this Affair until the Meeting of the Council. Vigilius thought he had found out a way to put a ſtop to this Conteſt; for the Biſhops of Africa and Illyria had no Safe-conduct to come to Conſtantinople, where they foreſaw that they ſhould be forc'd to conſent to the Will of the Emperor, and they not appearing, Vigilius had a good Excuſe for not being preſent. In the mean time he had by way of Preparation, withdrawn for ever the Writing which had ſo much diſpleaſed the Occidentaliſts, and was free to take what ſide he would. But this Artifice did not ſucceed well, for the Emperor being provok'd with the Delays which the Biſhops of Africa and Illyria made, and ſeeing that Vigilius had trapp'd him, caus'd an Edict which was made againſt the three Chapters, and was kept ſecret till then, to be publiſh'd at the beginning of the Year 551. Vigilius had preſently recourſe to the ordinary Weapons of Popes, by declaring thoſe who ſhould receive this Edict to be excommunicated. He caus'd the ſame thing to be done alſo by Dacus of Milan.

'Tis eaſie to conceive the Anger in which Juſtinian was to ſee himſelf treated ſo harſhly: and Vigilius, to ſhun the Effects of it, retired into the Church of St. Peter. The Emperor ſent thither an Officer who would have drawn him forth by force, but the People beat him back, ſo that Vigilius did not come out till the Emperor had promiſed him with an Oath that he would do him no hurt. After he had received this Promiſe he returned into the Palace of Placidia: But finding that they were continually drawing up Indictments, and making Snares for him, he withdrew by night to Chalcedon to the Temple of St. Euphemia. The Emperor ſent to him ſix Senators to perſuade him to return, but neither they, nor Peter, the Maſter of Requeſts to the Church of Conſtantinople, could make him reſolve to ſurrender himſelf to the Will of the Emperor; but on the contrary, he publiſh'd the the Sentence of Excommunication againſt Theodorus of Cæſarea, and of Suſpenſion againſt Mennas, which he had given ſix Months before, and ſent a Circular Letter wherein he repreſented the Miſeries which he was forc'd to endure.

This Firmneſs of Vigilius aſtoniſh'd his Adverſaries, and made them take up a Reſolution of handling things with more Moderation. They ſent him therefore a Confeſſion of Faith, wherein having approv'd the Decrees of the firſt four General Councils, and the Letters of St. Leo, they conſent that all the Formularies made for the Condemnation of the three Chapters, ſhould be put into his hands. As to the Reproaches and ill Treatment he might have receiv'd, they diſallow of them, and ask his pardon for communicating with thoſe whom he had excommunicated. This Formulary was ſent to Vigilius by Mennas, Theodorus of Cæſarea, Andrew of Epheſus, Theodorus of Antioch in Piſidia, Peter of Tarſus, and by many other Biſhops, who did all ſign it in a diſtinct Copy.

Vigilius having thus compaſs'd his Deſign return'd to Conſtantinople, towards the end of the year 552, where he receiv'd a ſecond Confeſſion of Faith, in the name of Eutychius, who ſucceeded Mennas lately deceas'd on the day of Theophany, i. e. on the ſixth of January in the year 553. It was alſo ſign'd by Apollinaris of Antioch, whom the Emperor had plac'd in the room of Zoilus, either becauſe Zoilus would not ſign the Edict of Condemnation of the three Chapters, as is reported in the Chronicle of Victor, or becauſe Paul, to whom Zoilus ſucceeded, had given Money to the Emperor to remove him, in hopes of being reſtor'd to that See, as Procopius thinks in his Secret Hiſtory. Howſoever it was, Vigilius who complain'd in his Sentence againſt Theodorus of the Depoſition of Zoilus, and the Appointment of Apollinaris, acknowledges here Apollinaris to be a lawful Biſhop by receiving his Confeſſion of Faith; which ſhews the Inconſtancy of this Pope. In ſhort, Domnus the ancient Biſhop of Antioch, Elias of Theſſalonica, and all the other Biſhops of the Eaſt, ſubſcrib'd to this ſecond Confeſſion of Faith, in which they made the like diſtinction as in the former. In it they profeſs'd to adhere inviolably to the Faith decreed in the four firſt General Councils, and in the Letters of the Popes, and particularly in thoſe of St. Leo; and afterwards they deſire, that ſince it is neceſſary to decide the Difference about the three Chapters for reſtoring Peace to the Church, that this Matter may be handled in an Aſſembly of Biſhops where the Pope ſhall preſide, and where things ſhall be treated of with that Meekneſs and Moderation which becomes Biſhops. Petimus præſidente nobis veſtra Beatitudine, ſub tranquillitate & Sacerdotali manſuetudine, communi tractatu eadem Capitula in medio proponenda quæri & conferri, & finem quæſtioni imponi.

The Pope Vigilius accepted this Propoſition by his Letter January the ſixth of the ſame year; but he deſires that this Council may meet in Italy, or in Sicily, and that the Biſhops of Africa, and the other Weſtern Biſhops, may be cited to come there. The Emperor not being willing to paſs this Article, it was determin'd that at leaſt he ſhould ſummon to the Council thoſe Weſtern Biſhops, whom Vigilius ſhould ſignifie to him. In fine, ſometime before Eaſter it was agreed, as Vigilius had ſaid, that an equal number of Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops ſhould be ſummon'd to meet and treat of this Affair.

The Emperor being vex'd that the thing was delay'd ſo long, and deſiring to determine this Affair to his own Advantage, caus'd the Council to meet on the third of (a) May, in the year 553. Eutychius the Patriarch of Conſtantinople held the firſt place in it; after him Apollinaris the Patriarch of Alexandria, Domnus the Patriarch of Antioch, two Biſhops deputed from the Biſhop of Jeruſalem, and 147 Biſhops Dependents upon theſe Patriarchs.

The Councils.

All theſe Biſhops being aſſembled in the Epiſcopal (b) Prætorium of Conſtantinople, Diodorus the Archdeacon and chief of the Notaries, declar'd to them, that Theodorus, (c) Gentleman of the Chamber, was ſent in the Emperor's name to their Aſſembly. Eutychius having order'd that he ſhould be admitted, he preſented to the Synod a Letter from the Emperor. It was read in the Council. Here follow the Contents of it.

Juſtinian intending to prove that the Emperors did always take care to maintain the Faith of the Church in its purity, relates what paſs'd in the four firſt General Councils by their Authority: Neither does he forget what he had done himſelf to ſupport the Authority of the Council of Chalcedon, againſt the Followers of Neſtorius and Eutyches, and to drive out of the Churches thoſe who would not receive it. He adds, that a little while ago ſome Neſtorians deſiring to inſinuate their Doctrine, and not being able to do it under the name of Neſtorius, conſulted how to do it under the name of Theodorus the Maſter of Neſtorius, who had aſſerted Blaſphemies and Impieties, even greater than that Heretick: That they had alſo made uſe of the Writings of Theodoret againſt St. Cyril, and of the impious Letter of Ibas, which, they ſay, was approv'd in the Council of Chalcedon, to cover their Impiety under the name of this Council, their deſign being to order the matter ſo, that it ſhall no more be ſaid, that the Word of God was made Man, and that the Virgin Mary is the Mother of God. That to put a ſtop to the progreſs of this Hereſie, he had conſulted the Biſhops about the three Chapters, and had condemn'd them; but that ſome Perſons, intending ſtill to maintain them, notwithſtanding this Condemnation, he found himſelf oblig'd to call this Aſſembly, that they might once more declare what their Opinion was about this ſubject: That Vigilius having come from Rome to Conſtantinople, had carefully examin'd them, and condemn'd and anathematiz'd them many times, even in writing. That he had alſo diſcover'd how firm and ſtedfaſt he was in this Judgment, by condemning Ruſticus and Sebaſtianus, who after they had at firſt receiv'd the Conſtitution which he made upon this ſubject, did retract what they had done, and defend the three Chapters: That he had alſo written upon this Subject to Valentinian Biſhop of Scythia, and to Aurelian Biſhop of the Church of Arles, which is, ſays the Emperor, the firſt Church of the Gauls: That after they were come to Conſtantinople, it was agreed with him, that a Council ſhould be aſſembled to treat of this Affair together: That in conſequence of this he had declar'd to him by his Magiſtrates, that he ſhould be preſent at the Aſſembly of Biſhops, to condemn there with the reſt the three Chapters; or to defend them if he thought they could be maintain'd: But he had made anſwer, that he would acquaint the Emperor with his thoughts about the three Chapters; that he exhorted them alſo to treat of this matter in the Synod. He declares afterwards, that he receives the Decrees of the four firſt General Councils; that he rejects the Errors which did not agree with their Doctrine; that he follows the holy Doctors of the Church, viz. St. Athanaſius, St. Hilary, St. Baſil, St. Gregory Nazianzen, St. Gregory Nyſſen, St. Ambroſe, Theophilus, St. John Chryſoſtome, St. Cyril, St. Auſtine, Proclus, and St. Leo, and that he approved all that they had written for the Faith againſt Errors:

(a) There it is, 4to Nonas, which is the 2d, but it muſt be corrected according to the Manuſcript of Mr. Joly, 3o Nonas, which is the 3d, being a Sunday. This Correction is prov'd, becauſe the Deputies ſent to Vigilius, were ſent to him on the day of this Conference, two days before the ſecond Seſſion.

(b) So it muſt be read and underſtood, in Secretario venerabilis Epiſcopi hujus regiæ Civitatis; & Secretarium, is properly the Tribunal of the Patriarch of Conſtantinople. There were two of them at Conſtantinople, as is obſerv'd by Mr. du Cange, whoſe death hath afflicted all learn'd Men, who cannot ſufficiently regret ſo great a loſs.

(c) Silenciers were conſiderable Officers of the Emperor, who entred into his ſecret Chamber, which was call'd Silentium, as who ſhould ſay, the Gentlemen of the Chamber.

The Councils.

That he own'd for Catholicks thoſe who believ'd what was decreed by the four firſt General Councils, and taught by the Holy Fathers. But ſince the Hereticks, who would vindicate Neſtorius, dar'd to affirm that the Council of Chalcedon had approv'd Theodorus, he exhorts them upon this occaſion, to enquire what was the Judgment of this Council, and of that at Epheſus; whether they did not anathematize the Creed of Theodorus, and whether he was not already condemn'd, and his name raz'd out of the Eccleſiaſtical Diptychs. He deſires them alſo to examine, whether we may not anathematize the dead, and whether the Examples of John and Flavianus do not prove that it may be done. In fine, he recommends to them the Examination of the Letter of Ibas, and the Writings of Theodoret, and to compare the Doctrine with that of the Council of Chalcedon. He admoniſhes them above all things, to have nothing before their eyes but the fear of God, and the love of Truth, and to return him an Anſwer quickly, becauſe when there is a long time taken to anſwer about a matter of Faith, 'tis a ſign that the Perſon is not well diſpos'd to maintain the Truth: And that moreover, when a Queſtion or Anſwer about the Faith is handled, we muſt neither conſider who is the firſt, nor who is the laſt, but that he who is moſt ready to anſwer is moſt acceptable to God: Which words are plainly written againſt Vigilius,

After the reading of this Letter, Theodorus was order'd to go forth; and the Letter of Eutychius to Vigilius, and the Anſwer of Vigilius to Eutychius were read, wherein the Pope had conſented, that a Council ſhould be held about the Affair of the three Chapters, and promis'd to be preſent at it. After which three Patriarchs were ſent Deputies to him, with the moſt conſiderable Biſhops of the Council, to invite him to come to the Aſſembly. He anſwer'd them, that he could give no Anſwer to day, becauſe of his Indiſpoſition, but he would acquaint them to morrow what he thought of their Aſſembly. The Deputies came to report this to the Council, and the matter was delay'd till to morrow. This is what paſs'd on the firſt Collation or Conference of the Council held on the third of May.

The ſecond Conference was on the eighth of the ſame Month. The Deputies reported, that being to wait upon Pope Vigilius on the ſixth of May to know his Anſwer, he told them, that he could not aſſemble with them, becauſe there was a very great number of Eaſtern Biſhops, and he had but a few Weſtern Biſhops with him; that they had remonſtrated to him, that he had promis'd and ſubſcrib'd that he would be preſent at their Aſſembly; that it was not neceſſary there ſhould be at the Council a conſiderable number of Weſtern Biſhops; that there had been but few in the greater part of the preceding General Councils; that he had with him the Biſhops of Africa and Illyria; that notwithſtanding this, Vigilius could not reſolve to come to their Aſſembly, but that he had propos'd that the three Patriarchs ſhould come with a fourth Biſhop, who ſhould find with him three Weſtern Biſhops, and that they together might regulate theſe matters; that they had repreſented to him how indecent it would be, that three Patriarchs ſhould have only one Biſhop with them, and that eight Biſhops alone ſhould make Synodical Decrees, while there was a very great number of them in the Aſſembly; that having preſs'd him to anſwer, he had deſir'd of them twenty days delay, in which time he had promis'd to diſcover his mind and will, and if he ſhould not do it, he would follow their Opinion; that they had made anſwer to him that it was not fit to abuſe thus the Patience of the Emperor, and to give Scandal to the People; that now this Cauſe had continued already for the ſpace of ſeven years; that they were urg'd in the Emperor's name to give a ſpeedy Anſwer; that he ought not to refuſe to come to the Aſſembly to treat there of this Affair with them; that at leaſt he ſhould promiſe them, that if he did not in twenty days remove the Scandal which he had given in defending the three Chapters, he ſhould not withdraw from their Communion; that they could not draw from him any other Anſwer upon this Subject; that they had promis'd to report theſe Anſwers to the Emperor; that having done it, the Emperor had ſent with them Magiſtrates to the Pope.

The Councils.

Theſe Magiſtrates appear'd here at Council, and declar'd, that they had twice waited upon Vigilius in the Emperor's Name, and that he had told them, that he had no other Anſwer to give them, but what they might find at the Council, where he ſhould have liberty to ſay what he would for the Prohibition of the three Chapters. That Vigilius had often anſwer'd them, that he would give his Opinion alone; that they had told him, that he had many times already condemn'd the three Chapters in private by himſelf, but the deſign of the Emperor was, that he ſhould be preſent at the Council, that there the Matter might receive a publick Deciſion by common conſent. That as to the delay it ſhould be granted him, and even a greater than he had deſir'd, provided he would promiſe to treat of this Affair in the publick Aſſembly; but if he would give his Deciſion in private, the Emperor would alſo know the private Judgment of other Biſhops. That notwithſtanding all this, the Pope continued firm in his firſt Reſolution. This Report was confirm'd by the Biſhops that were deputed, and the Magiſtrates withdrew after they had exhorted the Biſhops to determine this Affair ſpeedily. When they had withdrawn, the Council order'd four Weſtern Biſhops to be cited, who were at Conſtantinople, viz. Primaſius of the Province of Byzacena in Africa, Sabinianus and Projectus of Illyria, and Paul the Biſhop of the ſecond Juſtinianea. The firſt anſwer'd, that he would not come to the Synod where the Pope was not; and the others excus'd themſelves becauſe their Archbiſhop was not there. Theſe Anſwers being reported to the Synod, it diſapproved of their Conduct; and as to Primaſius it declar'd, that they would handle him according to the rigor of the Canons, in due time and place: As to the other three, that they ſhould have leave to go and find out their Archbiſhop Benenatus, who communicated with the Biſhops of the Council, and who had alſo deputed a Biſhop of his Dioceſs, call'd Phocas, who was preſent at the Council. This Matter being thus order'd, they put off the Affair till the morrow.

They did not again debate the Queſtion about the three Chapters, but only made a Profeſſion, that they do embrace the Faith of the four General Councils, and follow the Doctrine of the Holy Fathers. This is all that there is in the third Conference. They uſe almoſt the ſame words that the Emperor made uſe of.

In the fourth Conference held on the twelfth of May, the Examination of the Affair for which the Council was aſſembled, begun by the reading of many Extracts taken out of the Books of Theodorus of Mopſueſta. The Creed was alſo read which was attributed to him, and is reported in the Council of Epheſus. When this was ended, the Biſhops without any further Examination did all cry out, Anathema againſt the Writings, againſt the Creed, and againſt the Perſon of Theodorus, an Anathema to thoſe who do not anathematize him. After many Acclamations of this kind, among which it was not forgotten to wiſh a long Life to the Emperor, it was determin'd, that tho' the Blaſphemies of Theodorus which they had juſt now read, were more than ſufficient to procure his Condemnation, yet it was convenient to enquire further, what there was againſt him: Which was put off to another Aſſembly.

It was held the next day according to ſome, according to others it was delay'd to the ſeventeenth of the ſame Month. However this was, in this Seſſion were read the Teſtimonies which could be found againſt Theodorus of Mopſueſta. Here follows a Catalogue of them. 1. Extracts out of a Book of St. Cyril againſt Theodorus. 2. A Libel preſented to Proclus clus of Constantinople, by the Priests and Deacons who call'd themselves the Deputies of the Churches of Armenia, Persis, and other Nations, who accuse him of having preach'd in their Houses Nestorianism. 3. An Extract out of the Answer of Proclus, who condemns sufficiently in general the Error of Nestorius, and blames those who sow bad Doctrines, yet without saying any thing against Theodorus. 4. Five Letters of St. Cyril against Theodorus. 5. An Extract out of the Ecclesiastical History of Hesychius a Priest of Jerusalem, who affirms, that Theodorus of Mopsuesta is he to whom St. Chrysostome wrote two Books, persuading him to forsake his disorderly Courses, who accuses him of being void of all Piety, and denying that the Word was truly Incarnate. 6. Two Laws of the Emperors Theodosius and Valentinian against the Followers of Nestorius, where Theodorus is joyn'd with this Heretick. 7. A Letter of Theophilus against those who maintain the Heresie of Nestorius, where it was pretended that he speaks of Theodorus. 8. A Letter of St. Gregory Nyssen to Theophilus, against them who writing against Apollinarius, fall into the Error of Nestorius. 9. Some Extracts out of the Writings of Theodoret, which prove that Theodorus was accus'd by St. Cyril. 10. An Extract out of the Treatise of St. Cyril against Theodorus, where he commends the diligence of this Author, and condemns his impious Doctrine.

After this, some Letters of St. Gregory Nazianzen address'd to a Bishop call'd Theodorus, were examin'd, and it was prov'd both by the Letters themselves, and by the Testimony of the Bishops, that they were written to Theodorus of Tyana, and not to Theodorus of Mopsuesta.

Lastly, this other Question was debated, whether we may condemn the Dead. At first two passages of St. Cyril of an indefinite Sense were recited, which prov'd nothing. But Sextilianus Bishop of Africa, being deputed from Primosus Bishop of Carthage, related many passages of St. Austine to shew, that the Dead may be condemned, who were not condemned during their Life. Afterwards Benignus Bishop of Heraclea, being deputed from the Bishop of Thessalonica, alledg'd some Examples of this Practice very unlikely; and added, that Theodorus himself had been condemned after his death, by Rambulas Bishop of Edessa.

This Question being thus decided, a Letter of St. Cyril was examin'd, which was supposed to be written to John of Antioch, wherein he says, that he ought not to separate from the Communion of Theodorus; and some pretend that it was convicted of Forgery, by repeating many other Letters of St. Cyril, wherein he does openly condemn Theodorus. To these Testimonies of St. Cyril was added that of Proclus of Constantinople, and the Testimonies of St. Basil, and St. John Chrysostome, which appear'd favourable to Theodorus, were evaded, by observing that the Fathers did sometimes praise Hereticks thro' Ignorance.

One of the chief Monuments inserted into this Conference is an Enquiry made by a Council held in the year 550, to know whether the name of Theodorus of Mopsuesta was in the Diptychs. Here the whole Acts are related, at the beginning of which there are two Letters of the Emperor Justinian, one to John of Anazarbum, wherein he gives him order to call the Synod; and the other to Cosmus Bishop of Mopsuesta, wherein he acquaints him that he had given him this Order. Eight Bishops of the Province were present there, together with John of Justinianople their Metropolitan. The Priests, the elder Inhabitants, and the Churchwardens were sent for. In the first place the Diptychs were demanded of the Churchwarden. He presented those which he now made use of, and two Rolls more ancient. In them were read the names of the Bishops of Mopsuesta, since the Faith of Nice was restor'd to Mopsuesta. The name of one Theodorus was found in two of these Diptychs, and it was not found in the last. This place of History informs us both of the Succession of Bishops, and of the Form of the Diptychs. It is express'd in these words: Pro requiescentibus Episcopis Protogene, Zozimo, Olympio, Cyrillo, Thoma, Bassiano, Joanne, Auxentio, Palatino, Jacobo, Theodoro, Simeone. Afterwards the Priests and ancient People are ask'd, and they do all unanimously depose, that they have never heard the name of the old Theodorus read in the Diptychs, but that they do well remember that of Cyril, and that the Theodorus, whose name was in the Diptychs, was another Theodorus of Galatia, who died about three years ago. The Bishops made an Act of these things, and wrote of them to the Emperor, and to the Pope Vigilius.

The Councils.

This Conference of the fifth Council ended with the reading of the Extracts taken out of the Books of Theodoret, which are thought to favour too much the Error of Nestorius. In them was found a Letter address'd to John of Antioch, which was pretended to be against the Memory of St. Cyril. Some have thought it Supposititious, as well because of the sharp Style wherein it was written, as because it is probable that St. Cyril did not die till after John. Mr. de Marca thinks that Domnus should be put instead of John; but it is not certain that he speaks of St. Cyril in this Letter; on the contrary, he of whom Theodoret speaks was a Bishop in the Dioceses of Antioch. Procurandum, says he to John of Antioch, & oportet tuam Sanctitatem hanc suscipere festinantiam, & jubere Collegio mortuos asportantium, lapidem aliquem maximum & gravissimum sepulchro imponere, ne iterum perveniret.

The sixth Conference on the nineteenth of May, begun with the reading of the Letter of Ibas to Maris of Persis, written upon occasion of the Differences which were between St. Cyril of Alexandria and the Eastern Bishops. In it he supposes that Nestorius and St. Cyril had fall'n into two opposite Errors: that the latter had affirm'd there was but one Nature in Jesus Christ, and that Nestorius having deny'd that the Virgin was the Mother of God, had given occasion to believe that he follow'd the Sentiment of Paulus Samosatenus: that the Doctrine of the Church is, that there are two Natures and one Person in Jesus Christ: that the Emperor had assembled a Council at Ephesus about the Contests between St. Cyril and Nestorius: that St. Cyril being arriv'd at Ephesus before John of Antioch and the Orientalists, had procur'd the condemnation of Nestorius, and the approbation of his 12 Chapters: that John of Antioch and the Orientalists being arriv'd, had done the quite contrary by condemning the Chapters of St. Cyril, and deposing him, and excommunicating the Bishops who comply'd with his desires; that both of them had withdrawn without being reconcil'd; that thus the Eastern Bishops had continued in a Separation from those of the other Dioceses; that this had given a great Scandal to the Church, and that many Bishops under a pretence of being zealous for the Faith, cherished Divisions, and made cruel Wars one upon another; that among the rest a Bishop in their Quarters (of Edessa) whom he calls a Tyrant, had cruelly reproached the Memory of Theodorus, being mov'd by a secret hatred which he had to him: that the Emperor desiring to put an end to these Commotions, had persuaded John of Antioch to be reconcil'd to St. Cyril: that he had sent to him Paul Bishop of Emesa; with a Confession of Faith, and an Order to communicate with him, if he would consent to it; and if he would anathematize those who said that the Divinity of Jesus Christ had suffer'd, and that the Divinity and Humanity are in him only one Nature: that God had touch'd the heart of this Egyptian, that he had satisfied the desires of John of Antioch, and that these two Bishops being reconcil'd, Peace was restor'd to the Church. These are the principal Points contain'd in the Letter of Ibas, which indeed is not written in a very respectful manner towards St. Cyril, but it contains nothing but what is very Orthodox.

The Councils.

Afterwards was read a Letter of Proclus, wherein it appear'd that Ibas had been accus'd of tranſlating into Syriack, and publiſhing the Neſtorian Propoſitions wich Proclus had condemn'd, and which he had ſent to John of Antioch, that he might be oblig'd to retract them, and to make a Profeſſion of the Faith of the Church. After the reading of this Letter, Theodorus added, that after the death of John, the ſame Accuſers of Ibas addreſs'd themſelves to Domnus his Succeſſor, and that Domnus refuſing to hearken to them, they came to wait upon the Emperor, and Flavian the Biſhop, Succeſſor to Proclus in the See of Conſtantinople, who had referr'd this Affair. 'Tis remarkable that this Reference is attributed as well to the Emperor as to the Patriarch. Precibus ſuſceptis, tam divinæ recordationis Theodaſius, quam Flavianus ſanctæ memoriæ, delegaverunt examinationem, who had referr'd, I ſay, the Deciſion of this Accuſation to Photius of Tyre, and Eutychius of Berytus, and appointed for putting this Order in Execution on behalf of the Emperor Damaſcius, and on behalf of Flavian Eulogius the Deacon, who caus'd Ibas and his Accuſers to appear before the two Biſhops that were nominated: that Ibas being accus'd of taxing St. Cyril and his Chapters of Hereſie, and of deſpiſing the Council of Epheſus, as having judg'd without mature Examination of the Matter under conſideration, declar'd, that ſince the Reconciliation he had never ſpoken ill of St. Cyril, but only before he was reconcil'd to John of Antioch. The Judges ordain'd that Ibas ſhould return to Edeſſa, and that he ſhould anathematize Neſtorius, and receive the Council of Epheſus as a lawful Council, and of equal Authority with that of Nice: that Ibas refuſing to obey this Sentence, was depos'd as well as Domnus, and that even Nonnus, who was ordain'd in his room, was preſent at the Council of Chalcedon, as a lawful Biſhop: that in this Council of Chalcedon his Letter was read, but not at all approv'd; that on the contrary the Deciſion of Photius and Euſtathius was confirm'd, who oblig'd Ibas to make Profeſſion of the contrary to that which was affirm'd in his Letter; and that the greater part of the Biſhops had receiv'd Ibas as a Penitent, in conſequence of the Declaration which he had made, that he condemned Neſtorius, and was troubled with remorſe for the evil he had ſpoken of St. Cyril. After Theodorus had finiſh'd this Relation, then were read the Paſſages of the Acts of the Councils of Epheſus and Chalcedon, wherein they treat of the Faith of the Church about the Incarnation, and after that the Decree of Faith made by the Council of Chalcedon, was compar'd with ſome places of the Letter of Ibas, and it was pretended that there were manifeſt Contradictions between them. Indeed there are ſuch found in that part which concerns the Memory of St. Cyril, and the Authority of the Council of Epheſus, and it may be alſo in ſome ways of expreſſion, but as to the ſubſtance, the Doctrine is the ſame. Nevertheleſs, here the Letter of Ibas was condemn'd as Heretical and Blaſphemous; and this Conference ended with the ſame kind of Acclamations as the former.

While the Council was thus preparing to condemn the three Chapters, Pope Vigilius ſent his Opinion in Writing to the Emperor, as he had promiſed: this Act is call'd Conſtitutum. After he has related what had paſs'd ſince it was agreed to hold a Council about the three Chapters, and the Reaſons which he had for refuſing to be preſent in the Aſſembly of the Eaſtern Biſhops, he tranſcribes ſixty Extracts out of the Books of Theodorus, which were condemn'd in the third Seſſion of this Council, and condemns them in the bad Senſe which they are capable of. Yet he ſpares the Perſon of Theodorus, becauſe he died in the Communion of the Church; and pretends that in this he follows the Conduct and Example of St. Cyril, of Proclus, and of the Councils of Epheſus and Chalcedon. He maintains that there is a Canon againſt condemning thoſe who die in Communion; and ſhews that it is the Practice of the Roman Church, by reciting the Authorities of the Popes, St. Leo, and Gelaſius, who affirm that we can neither condemn nor abſolve the Dead. He adds, that the Roman Church had not derogated from this Cuſtom in the Affair of St. Chryſoſtome, nor in that of Flavianus, ſince they died in her Communion. He quotes alſo an Example of Denys of Alexandria, taken out of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Euſebius, wherein it appears that this Biſhop had condemn'd the Doctrine of Nepos, about the Reign of Jeſus Chriſt on Earth for a thouſand years, without medling with his Perſon, becauſe he died in the Communion of the Church. As to the Writings of Theodoret, he thinks, that ſince the Council of Chalcedon requir'd nothing more of him, but only to anathematize Neſtorius, it was not convenient for them to do any thing more againſt him, and that it was ſufficient to condemn in general the Writings and Doctrines that favour'd the Neſtorians and Eutychians, without mentioning the Writings of thoſe Biſhops who died in the Communion of the Church. Laſtly, that as to Ibas, the Fathers of the Council of Chalcedon having receiv'd and approv'd him, after the reading of his Letter, which was Orthodox, altho' by a miſtake in matter of Fact it condemn'd St. Cyril, his Letter could not be condemn'd as Heretical, without violating the Deciſion of that Council. Laſtly, Vigilius confirms the Authority of that Council, and exhorts the Emperor to leave things in the ſame ſtate as that Council left them, without changing or adding any thing to them. He forbids all Perſons, by the Authority of the Holy Apoſtolical See to ſay or write any thing againſt what he had now propos'd concerning the three Chapters. This Decree was ſign'd by nineteen Biſhops, and is dated the fourteenth of May.

The Councils.

The Emperor, without being ſtopp'd by this Deciſion, caus'd the Examination of the Affair of the three Chapters to be ſtill continued, and that he might oppoſe the Authority of Vigilius to Vigilius himſelf, he caus'd the three Letters of Vigilius to be read in the ſeventh Conference of this Council, wherein he expreſly approv'd the Condemnation of the three Chapters, and condemn'd them himſelf. The firſt of theſe three Letters is to Ruſticus, and to Sebaſtianus a Deacon, whom he ſharply reproves, becauſe they had blam'd his Conduct for having condemn'd the three Chapters: the ſecond is to Valerian Biſhop of Tomi; and the third to Aurelian Biſhop of Arles.

Mr. Baluzius has publiſh'd from a Manuſcript of Mr. Joly two other Letters of the ſame Pope, addreſs'd to the Emperor and the Empreſs, wherein he declares that he is no Heretick, and that he never was; that he demands the Rights and Prerogatives due to his See; that he will by no means defend Hereticks, and that he anathematizes the Letter of Ibas, the Writings of Theodoret, and the Perſon of Theodorus of Mopſueſta, and that he believes there is in Jeſus Chriſt only one Subſtance, one Perſon, and one Operation.

Theſe Letters were produc'd in the ſixth Council at Seſſ. 13 and 14, but the Pope's Legates accus'd them of Forgery; and after Examination of the Matter, they were found to be in the Greek Copy of the fifth Council, which was in the Archives of the Patriarchal Church of Conſtantinople, but they were not to be found in the Latin Copy, and it appear'd that the Patriarch Paul had caus'd them to be tranſlated and copied out in a new Roll, which he had added to the ancient Verſion of this Council. Juſtinian makes mention of theſe Letters in his Epiſtle to the fifth Council. Laſtly, Facundus and Victor do aſſure us, that Vigilius had condemn'd the three Chapters to pleaſe the Emperor and Empreſs, according to his Oath before his Ordination; inſomuch that it was look'd upon as a thing moſt evident, that theſe Letters were Vigilius's. But it is not ſo certain that they were read and inſerted into the fifth Council, and it may be that they they were afterwards added. The same Judgment is to be made of the Oath to condemn the three Chapters taken by Vigilius in the presence of Theodorus of Cæsarea, and Patricius Cethegus, which is also found in the Manuscript of Mr. Joly, and which Mr. Baluzius has also publish'd, to supply the omission of those who had the care of publishing the Councils, who pass'd it by, altho' they had seen the Manuscript of Mr. Joly.

At the same Conference there was also read by the Emperor's Order, a Letter which was written about some Ecclesiasticks, who had solemnly carried about in the Church of Cyrus an Image of Theodoret, and had made a Commemoration of him, of Diodorus, of Theodorus and Nestorius. By this Letter the Emperor order'd Hypatius to inform himself of the Matter of Fact, and to enquire whether Sergius Bishop of Cyrus had not approv'd this Proceeding. 'Tis said, that this being found that he had done it, Sergius was turn'd out of his Church. After the reading of this Letter, the Fathers commended the good Intentions of the Emperor, who shall be, say they, rewarded by the Divine Goodness in another Life, and for which end we offer up our Prayers in this Life. The finishing of the Affair about the three Chapters was put off to another day.

There is also in the Manuscript of Mr. Joly a Letter of the Emperor against Vigilius, wherein he forbids to place his Name in the Diptychs. This Letter being dated July the fourteenth, is posterior to this Conference which was on the six and twentieth of May, and to the next, which was on the second of June; which proves evidently that the Letter was never read in the Council, but inserted afterwards when it was reduc'd into Acts.

In the eighth and last Conference, after they have prov'd the necessity of Ecclesiastical Assemblies and Conferences for the Decision of Matters of Faith, by the Example of the Apostles, and the four first Councils, they make a Recapitulation in a few words of all that had been done till that time.

This Recapitulation being ended, they made Profession of receiving the four first General Councils, and of anathematizing the Errors and Persons whom they condemn'd, and to whom were added the Person and Writings of Theodorus, the Writings of Theodoret, and the Letter of Ibas, who are anathematiz'd, together with those who undertake to write in Defence of these three Articles.

This General Decree was follow'd with fourteen Anathema's against many particular Errors, chiefly about the Incarnation. The three last contain yet more formally the Condemnation of the three Chapters, whose Defenders are also anathematiz'd.

Mr. Baluzius has also publish'd fifteen other Anathematisms against the Errors of the Origenians concerning the Souls of Men. If it were evident that these Chapters were made by the fifth General Council, it would be past all doubt that the Affair of Origen was decided there. But this is a Question which has difficulties on both sides: 'Tis certain that in the eight Conferences of the Council, there is no mention of any other Business but only that of the three Chapters, and that the Affair of Origen was not at all inquir'd into. Now there is no probability that after these three, were held two other Assemblies, as some suppose without any foundation; and it is so much the less probable, because Evagrius, who has made an Abridgment of this Council, says nothing of them in Canon 11. of the eighth Conference, and because Origen is plac'd in the number of Hereticks already condemn'd, and Theodorus speaks of him in the same manner in Conference. 5. But on the other side, the seventh General Council, and all the Greek Historians, do testifie, that the Cause of Origen, of Evagrius, and of Didymus, was decided in the fifth Council, and that their Writings were there examin'd and condemn'd. Yet 'tis easie to reconcile this apparent Contradiction, by reflecting on what we have said after Liberatus: that in the year 540 the Emperor made an Edict against the Writings of Origen, and caus'd his Doctrine to be condemn'd in a Synod held at Constantinople under Mennas. In this Synod it was that the Cause of Origen, of Evagrius and Didymus was examin'd, and the Acts of this Council being joyn'd to those of the Council held for the Condemnation of the three Chapters, as well as the Acts of the Synod of Mennas against Anthimus, Severus, Peter and Zoaras; what was done by these three Councils, was look'd upon as done by one and the same, to which the name of the fifth General Council was given. Photius sufficiently discovers this in his first Letter to Michel Duke of Bulgaria, where 'tis said that Mennas and Eutychius presided one after another in the fifth Council, and that in it the three Chapters were condemn'd, together with Origen and Didymus, Anthimus, Severus, and Zoaras. The same Condemnations are attributed to the fifth Council in the Profession of the Popes, which is related in the Diurnus Romanorum Pontificum, publish'd by Father Garneus. Sophronius the Patriarch of Constantinople in the Synodical Letter to Sergius, which is related in the sixth Council, speaking of the fifth Council, places the Condemnation of Origen and Evagrius, before that of the three Chapters, which discovers that it was done in the preceding Council. Constantinus Pogonatus confirm'd the sixth Council, Act 18. Cedrenus and the other Greek Writers follow the same Order. Lastly, Evagrius, and the other Greek Historians, who say that Origen was condemn'd in the fifth Council, suppose that the Edict of Justinian against Origen was address'd to this Council: Now 'tis certain that this was to the Synod held under Mennas, before that Vigilius was at Constantinople. 'Tis manifest, therefore that what they say of the Condemnation of Origen in the fifth Council concerns what pass'd in the Council held in 540 under Mennas, which made a part of the fifth Council. And in effect, Binius observes that he found in a Manuscript Acts of the Council held against Anthimus, intituled, Acta Synodi V. Const. and in the Latin Collections, whatsoever concerns these three Synods, is attributed to the fifth General Council, which is said to have been held under Silverius and Vigilius. The same is to be said of the Greek Canons against Origen, which are attributed to the fifth Council in the Title, because they belong to the Council held under Mennas against Origen.

The Councils.

Vigilius refusing to appear in the Synod, and much more to approve its Decision, was banish'd by the Emperor's Order, who commanded, as we have already observed, that his Name should be raz'd out of the Diptychs. But this Pope being always inconstant according to his old wont, quickly chang'd his Opinion and Resolution; For on the eighth of December he wrote a Letter to Eutychius, wherein he blam'd the Conduct he had observ'd, in refusing to be present at the Council, and retracted what he had written in Defence of the three Chapters, which he condemn'd in very sharp terms, and pronounc'd an Anathema against those who should defend them. Some thought that this Letter was supposititious, because it is very submissive, and Vigilius speaks in it very much to his own disadvantage. But this Conjecture is very weak. His natural Inconstancy, the state to which he was reduc'd, the desire he had to come out of Exile, the necessity of satisfying the Emperor, &c. might determine him to write this Letter. Who knows also but it might be suggested to him by Eutychius or Theodorus? Moreover, it contains no sign of Forgery. It was transcribed more than 400 years ago by a Greek Copy from a Manuscript of the Library of the Church of Rome, where it had been kept since the year 753. Besides, it is prov'd by the Teſtimonies of Photius, and by a Title which is found in an Ancient Arabick Collection, that Pope Vigilius approv'd what was done by the fifth General Council about the Affair of the three Chapters. This ſeems alſo to be the Senſe of the Letter of Pope Pelagius to the Biſhops of Iſtria. And moreover, Juſtinian had never ſuffer'd him to return from Baniſhment, if he had not ſubmitted to his Will. But altho' the Letter be the firſt Act of Conſent given by Vigilius to the fifth Council, yet it is not the only one: For we have one much longer and more authentick, publiſh'd a little while ago by Mr. Baluzius from a Manuſcript of the Library of Mr. Colbert. It is a moſt precious and excellent Monument; 'tis dated Febr. 23. in the year 554. 'Tis probable that Vigilius compos'd it after he was return'd from his Baniſhment. There he recites in the firſt place the Acts of the fifth Seſſion of the Council of Chalcedon, and the Letter of St. Leo. After this he repeats what paſs'd there upon occaſion of the Letter of Ibas, and endeavours to ſhew, againſt what was eſtabliſh'd in the preceding Conſtitution, that the Council believ'd the Letter of Ibas to be Heretical, and refutes the Reaſons which might be alledg'd to prove the contrary. After he has made a long Diſſertation upon this firſt Chapter, he enlarges much leſs upon the Condemnation of Theodorus, from which he did not much differ before, and ſays very little of the Writings of Theodoret. Laſtly, he anathematizes Theodorus, the Letter of Ibas, and the Writings of Theodoret, and all thoſe who would maintain them, and declares all that he had done and written himſelf in their Defence to be null and void.

This is the laſt Conſtitution of Vigilius about the three Chapters. He continued ſome time after in the Eaſt, and died in the year 558, as he was returning to Italy. Pelagius was ordain'd in his room, whom the Emperor call'd back from Baniſhment he had endur'd for defending the three Chapters, after he had promis'd to condemn them if he was choſen Pope. The Emperor ſpar'd not the other Biſhops in the Weſt who would not ſign the Condemnation of the three Chapters. He cauſed Reparatus Biſhop of Carthage to be turn'd out, and Primaſius to be ordain'd in his room, who preſently condemn'd the three Chapters. This Man perſecuted the African Biſhops who would not communicate with him, and prevail'd ſo far, that he made the greater part of the Africans to conſent to it. In Illyria the Biſhops were divided in their Opinions. Benenatus Archbiſhop of Theſſalonica, condemn'd the three Chapters: the greater part of the other Biſhops of Illyria defended them, and even ſeparated from the Communion of Benenatus upon this occaſion. The Biſhops of Italy did not much concern themſelves in this Controverſie; where only ſome Deacons and Prieſts defended the three Chapters, who for the moſt were baniſh'd. The Biſhops of Tuſcany reſiſted long enough, as we learn from the ſixth Letter of Pelagius. In the Gauls there was none almoſt but Dacus, the Biſhop of Milan, who was concern'd in this Affair, and as he had followed Vigilius in defending the three Chapters, ſo when he ſaw him abandon the Cauſe, he yielded: But the Biſhops of Iſtria and Liguria, who were under the Dominion of the Lombards, fearing no Perſecution from the Emperor, maintain'd the three Chapters with much boldneſs.

Thus I have given an account in a few words of every thing almoſt that was done about the Affair of the three Chapters in the Eaſt and in the Weſt: where you may ſee the Church in a wonderful Confuſion for a matter of a very ſmall conſequence. For what was the advantage of condemning the three Chapters? and why were they defended with ſo much ſtiffneſs? Thoſe who condemn'd them, and thoſe who maintain'd them, made Profeſſion of the ſame Faith, they acknowledg'd the ſame Councils, they proteſted that they adhered to the Decrees of the Council of Chalcedon. Why then did they not live in Peace with one another? Why do they condemn, why do they excommunicate, why do they perſecute one another? It had been much better for the Church, if Theodorus had never invented the Condemnation of the three Chapters, and if the Emperor Juſtinian had never reſolv'd to have them condemn'd by all the Biſhops, whether they would or no: then the Church had enjoy'd a Profound Peace, then many holy Biſhops both of the Eaſt and Weſt had never been remov'd from the Government of their Dioceſs, to attend frivolous Diſputes; many great Perſons, who were capable of doing very good Service to the Church, had never been baniſh'd, perſecuted and forc'd away. Laſtly, then the People had not been ſcandaliz'd with ſeeing ſuch a deadly Diviſion in the Church, and ſo great Animoſities among its Paſtors. If any ask who were to be blam'd at the bottom, thoſe who condemn'd, or thoſe who defended the three Chapters, it is a Queſtion very intricate, and very difficult to be reſolv'd: For if it was ſo obſcure and knotty at the time when it was debated, with what darkneſs and difficulties will it not be envelopp'd now? yet it may be, that we being free from thoſe Paſſions which diſturb'd the Minds of Men at that time, may judge of it more ſoundly than they. But beſides, that theſe Paſſions are not yet extinct, and Prejudice makes us engage with ſome warmth for the Intereſt of the Dead, we have not now the Writings of Theodorus of Mopſueſta, which caus'd a great Conteſt; neither have we a perfect knowledge how the Churches ſtood affected with reſpect to Theodoret and Ibas. Nevertheleſs let us try to ſay ſomething about it which appears to us moſt reaſonable, without obliging any Perſon to ſubmit to our Judgment.

The Councils.

Firſt, as to the Writings of Theodorus of Mopſueſta, 'tis certain that they were full of very harſh Expreſſions, and which ſeem'd to favour the Opinion of thoſe who admitted two Perſons in Jeſus Chriſt. But as he wrote before the Condemnation of the Error of Neſtorius, it ſeems that theſe Expreſſions ſhould be pardon'd him, eſpecially ſince the like are found in other Authors, and he in other places profeſs'd to acknowledge one Perſon and two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt.

As to his Perſon, ſuppoſing that his Dogmes were damnable, and that he had aſſerted manifeſt Impieties; it may be asked, whether it were lawful to condemn and anathematize him after his Death, who deceas'd in the Communion of the Church? 'Tis certain that the Church cannot, properly ſpeaking, condemn nor abſolve the Dead; i. e. remove them from or reſtore them to the Communion of the Church: For this Communion conſiſting in the Participation of the Sacraments, and in other Offices which the Faithful do to one another, 'tis impoſſible to refuſe or grant this Communion to the Dead. All that can be done in this Caſe, is to ſignifie that Reſpect or Hatred is due to their Memory, by pronouncing an Anathema againſt them, or by declaring that they were unjuſtly anathematiz'd during their Life; by putting their Name into the Diptychs of the Church, or by cauſing their Name to be blotted out of the Eccleſiaſtical Tables. There is no doubt but in this Senſe the Church can abſolve and condemn the Dead, by reſtoring them to, or removing them from this kind of Communion, which, properly ſpeaking, is no true Communion. But whether ſhe ought to do it or no, this is not ſo very clear. The Practice of the Church of Africa was for it, that of the Church of Rome was againſt it. It ſeems to be more Human and Natural, not to meddle with the Memory of the Dead, and to leave them all that Reputation wherewith they departed out of this Life: But then is it alſo juſt to ſuffer the Memory of an innocent Perſon to continue under Reproach, becauſe he was unjuſtly condemn'd in his Life-time? Is it fit to suffer a wicked and impious Person to enjoy that Reputation which he never deserv'd? I think that when the thing is clear and evident, we should declare for the Truth: But in a doubtful Case it is better to leave things as they are.

As to the Chapter concerning the Letter of Ibas, there is no doubt but that it is reproachful against St. Cyril, and even against the Council of Ephesus; but then we must not condemn it as Heretical upon that account. The Council of Chalcedon did not formally approve it; but tolerated it, and look'd upon it as a Proof of the Orthodox Faith of Ibas, since at the same time that he did most oppose St. Cyril, he made this Profession, that there was but one Person and two Natures in Jesus Christ.

As to the Writings of Theodoret, they ought not to be condemn'd as Heretical: For tho' this Author did never approve the Anathematisms of St. Cyril, and had defended the Person of Nestorius; yet he always rejected his Error. And therefore the most that he can be accus'd of, is his being too partial, his not understanding aright the Sentiment of St. Cyril; but he cannot be accus'd of being an Heretick. And indeed, if John of Antioch, and the Orientalists, were not oblig'd to approve the Anathematisms of St. Cyril, if they were not forc'd to retract what they had said and written before the Union, why is Theodoret treated more harshly. Lastly, the Council of Chalcedon having never requir'd Theodoret to retract his Writings, it was needless to condemn them.

The Councils.

Nevertheless it must be confess'd, that the fifth Council having condemn'd the three Chapters, and the greatest part of all the Bishops in the World, having subscrib'd this Condemnation, it was convenient for Peace-sake to agree to it, and that those behav'd themselves very ill, who did not only obstinately refuse to subscribe this Condemnation, but also separated from the Communion of those who sign'd it. For nothing is more to be desir'd than Peace; and many times it is very fit to sacrifice our private Interests for the Repose and Tranquillity of the Church.

The fifth Council of Arles.

Of Arles.

SApaudus Bishop of Arles held this Council at the end of June in the year 554, wherein were made seven Canons.

The second, that the Monasteries and Jurisdiction over the Monks shall belong to the Bishop in whose Territory the Monasteries are situate.

The third, that the Abbots shall not remove from their Monastery without leave from their Bishop.

The fourth, that a Priest cannot depose a Deacon or Subdeacon without the Bishop's knowledge.

The second Council of Paris in the Year 555.

THE same Sapaudus held another Council the next year, consisting of six and twenty Bishops, at Paris, wherein the Deposition of Saffaracus Bishop of Paris was confirm'd.

Of Paris.

The third Council of Paris.

Of Paris.

THE Archbishops of Bourges, of Roan, and of Bourdeaux were present at this Council, together with thirteen Bishops. It was held under King Childebert towards the year 557. It made ten Canons.

The first is a long Canon against those who detain the Possessions belonging to the Church.

The second is against those who invade the Possessions of the Church.

The third is against those Bishops who seek after the Possessions of another.

The fourth forbids to marry the Widow of his Brother, his Father, or his Uncle, his Wife's Sister, her Daughter-in-law, her Aunt, the Daughter of her Daughter-in-law, &c.

The fifth is against those who take away by force, or desire in Marriage Virgins consecrated to God.

The sixth forbids to desire of the Prince to grant Maids or Widows against the Consent of their Kinsfolk.

Of Paris.

The seventh renews the Prohibition of receiving any Person excommunicated by his Bishop.

The eighth forbids to constitute any one Bishop over the People against their Will. It ordains that there shall be a Choice made with perfect freedom by the People and the Clergy; that he shall not be appointed by the Order of the Prince, nor ordain'd against the Judgment of the Metropolitan.

The ninth ordains that the Children of Slaves to whom Liberty has been granted on condition that they pay some Service, shall be oblig'd to discharge this Office to which they were design'd.

The tenth is, that these Canons shall be sign'd by the Bishops.

The Edict of Clotharius.

BY this Edict the King grants to the Bishops the Power of hindring the Execution of unjust Judgments given by the Judges. It forbids any to use his Authority for taking away by force, or marrying Maids and Widows. It forbids also to marry Virgins consecrated to God. It secures to the Church the Donations that are made to it, and grants it Exemption from Taxes. It exempts Clergymen from publick Offices, and confirms all the Grants made to the Church by his Predecessors.

The Edict of Clotharius.

The first Council of Bracara.

Of Bracara.

LUcretius, Metropolitan of Bracara, held this Council of seven Bishops on the first day of May in the year 563, under King Ariamirus. Father L'abbee reckons it the second, but that which he places first is a Forgery.

The Bishops begun with rejecting the Errors of the Priscillianists, by causing the Letter of St. Leo to Turribius, and the Canons of the first Council of Toledo, to be read; and by making seventeen Propositions against the Errors of Manichæus and Priscillian.

Of Bracara.

The Councils.

cillian. They read afterwards a Letter from the Holy See addreſs'd to Profuturus, and made two and twenty Canons concerning Diſcipline.

The firſt is, that the ſame way of ſinging the Mattins and Veſpers ſhall be every where obſerv'd, and that the private Cuſtoms of Monaſteries ſhall not be mix'd with the Uſage of the Church.

The ſecond, that on ſolemn days the ſame Leſſons ſhall be read.

The third, that the Biſhops ſhall not ſalute the People after a different manner from the Prieſts, and that they ſhall only ſay, The Lord be with you; that the People ſhall anſwer, And with your Spirit: that this is the Practice of the whole Eaſt, which is of Apoſtolical Tradition.

The fourth, that in Divine Service that Order ſhall be obſerv'd which Profuturus has receiv'd from the Holy See.

The fifth, that the Uſage of the Church of Bracara ſhall be obſerv'd in the Ceremonies of Baptiſm.

The ſixth, that the Biſhops of the Province ſhall be rank'd according to their Antiquity.

The ſeventh, that the Revenues of the Church ſhall be divided into three Parts; that the firſt ſhall be for the Biſhop, the ſecond for the Clergy, and the third for maintaining the Church and the Light; that the Archprieſt or Archdeacon ſhall give an account of this laſt to the Biſhop.

The eighth forbids Biſhops to ordain a Clergyman of another Biſhop without his leave in writing.

The ninth ordains, that for the future Deacons ſhall wear their Stole upon their Shoulders, and not hide it under their Tunic, that they may be diſtinguiſh'd from Subdeacons.

The tenth forbids Readers, who are not ordain'd Subdeacons, to carry the holy Veſſels.

The eleventh forbids them to ſing in the Church in a Secular Habit, and to ſuffer their Muſtuche's to grow. The Councils.

The twelfth declares, that they muſt not ſing any Hymn in the Church but only the Pſalms, and Paſſages of the Canonical Books of the Old and New Teſtament.

The thirteenth forbids Laymen to enter into the Sanctuary to receive the Communion.

The fourteenth, to remove all ſuſpicion of being Priſcillianiſts, ordains the Clergymen, who eat no meat, to taſte of the Herbs which are boil'd with Meat.

The fifteenth is, that none ſhall communicate with a Clergyman excommunicated by his Biſhop.

The ſixteenth, that no Commemoration ſhall be made of thoſe who lay violent Hands on themſelves, and that their Corpſe ſhall not be conducted to Burial with ſinging of Pſalms: that the ſame ſhall be obſerv'd as to thoſe who are condemn'd to death as Criminals.

The ſeventeenth, that no Commemoration ſhall be made, no Pſalms ſhall be ſung, for the Catechumens that die without Baptiſm.

The eighteenth, that none ſhall be interr'd in the Churches, but without them, and round about the Walls.

The nineteenth forbids Prieſts to bleſs the Chriſm, or to conſecrate the Altars.

The twentieth ordains that none ſhall be promoted to the Prieſthood, who has not been at leaſt one year a Reader.

The one and twentieth, that the Alms of the Faithful, and the Offerings for the Dead, ſhall be collected by a truſty Clergyman, who ſhall divide them equally amongſt the Clergy once or twice a year.

The two and twentieth forbids to violate the ancient Canons, and thoſe that are made in this Council.

Of Santones.

Gregory of Tours relates that Leontius Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, held a Council at Santones, wherein he depos'd Emerius, who had taken an Order from King Clotharius, to get himſelf ordain'd Biſhop without the conſent of the Metropolitan. Heraclius was made choice of to ſucceed him; but Charibertus maintain'd him who was ordain'd by his Father's order. This was done in 563. Of Santones.

The ſecond Council of Lyons.

Of Lyons.

THIS Council was compos'd of the Archbiſhops of Lyons and Vienna, and twelve Biſhops, and was held under the Sons of Clotharius in the year 567. It made ſix Canons.

By the firſt it is order'd, that the Differences of the Biſhops of one Province ſhall be determin'd by the Judgment of the Metropolitan, and the Biſhops of that Province; and that if the Biſhops who are at odds be of different Provinces, then two Metropolitans ſhall accomodate the matter.

The ſecond orders, that all the Donations made to Churches ſhall continue good, tho' they be not drawn up with all the Formalities which the Laws require. Of Lyons.

The third declares, that thoſe who take or detain Freemen by force ſhall be excommunicated.

The fourth, that he who is excommunicated by his Biſhop, ſhall not be receiv'd into Communion until he be abſolv'd.

The fifth, that Biſhops ſhall not take away from the Clergy the Revenues that are given them by their Predeceſſors.

The ſixth, that Litanies ſhall be ſaid in all the Churches and Pariſhes in the firſt Week of September, as before Aſcenſion-day.

The ſecond Council of Tours in the Year 567.

Of Tours.

THIS Council was not very numerous, for it conſiſted only of ſeven Biſhops, and the Archbiſhops of Tours and Roan; but it made ſeven and twenty great Canons.

The firſt renews the Order for holding Provincial Synods twice every year. It decrees Excommunication againſt thoſe Biſhops who ſhall not come to them when they ſhall be ſummon'd.

The ſecond ordains Biſhops, who are at difference, to determine them amicably by Judges which they ſhall chooſe.

Theſe are the words of the third, Ut Corpus Domini in Altari, non imaginario ordine, ſed Crucis titulo componatur. To this Canon different ſenſes are given. That which ſeems to me moſt natural is, that the Parcels of the Euchariſt which are upon the Altar, ſhall not be rang'd according to the fancy of him that celebrates, but in the form of a Croſs, as is to be ſeen in the ancient rangings of them. Some think that the Council ordains, that the Body of Chriſt ſhall not be plac'd upon the Altar in the rank of Images, but under the Croſs. This ſenſe does not appear to me ſo natural. Of Tours.

The fourth forbids Laymen to place themſelves behind the Altar with the Clergy, while the Office is a reading; but allows them to enter into the Sanctuary, and even the Women to pray in private, and receive the Communion.

The fifth orders that every Pariſh ſhall maintain its own Poor.

The

The Councils.

The sixth, that no Letters of Recommendation shall be receiv'd, but from the Bishops.

The seventh, that the Bishop cannot depose an Abbot, nor an Archpriest, without an Assembly of Priests and Abbots.

The eighth, that a Bishop who shall receive into Communion a Clergyman excommunicated, when he was advertis'd of it, shall be excommunicated until the meeting of the Synod.

The ninth forbids to ordain a Britain, or a Roman, in Britany, without the consent of the Metropolitan.

The tenth renews the Prohibitions so often made to Clergymen of keeping strange Women in their Houses.

The eleventh ordains that the Bishops, who shall neglect to put this Canon in execution, shall be excommunicated until the meeting of the Synod.

The twelfth, that the Bishop shall live with his Wife as with his Sister, without giving any cause of Suspicion.

The thirteenth, that the Bishop who has no Wife, shall not suffer any Woman in his House.

The fourteenth forbids Priests and Monks to take any Person to bed with them. It orders that Monks shall not lie two or three in several Cells, but in one common Hall, where some shall watch while others take their rest.

The third Council of Toledo.

Of Toledo.

THE King Reccaredus order'd the Biſhops of Spain to meet at Toledo in the beginning of the Month of May, in the Year 589, to reſtore the Catholick Faith and Diſcipline. After they had thus re-eſtabliſh'd the Faith, the Council renewed the ancient Diſcipline, reſtor'd the ancient Canons and the Synodical Letters of Popes in their vigor, and forbad to promote thoſe who are excluded by the Canons to holy Orders. This is contain'd in the firſt Canon of this Council.

The fourteenth forbids to keep Thursday as Holiday.

Of Sevil.

THis Council was held at Sevil in the fifth year of the Reign of Reccaredus. Leander Bishop of this Metropolis presided in it, and seven of his Suffragans were present at it.

There is nothing peculiar to this Council now remaining, but a Letter to Pegasus Bishop of Astigis, who could not be present at the Council, probably because he was weak; for neither could he be present at the third Council of Toledo.

The Bishops being assembled on the fourth day of November, in the principal Church of the City of Sevil, the Deacons of Pegasus presented to them a Memorial, which contain'd the Names of the Slaves of the Church, which his Predecessor Gaudentius had pretended to set at liberty, or to give to some of his Kinsfolk. The Bishops having consulted upon this occasion, how they are to be dispos'd of by the Canons, found it thus, that when a Bishop leaves the Possessions which he had in his own Name, to others than his Children or Grand-Children, rather than give them to the Church, no regard ought to be had to the Donations or Sales which he made of the Church's Possessions. From this Principle founded upon the sixth Canon of the Council of Agda, they conclude, that if the Church of Pegasus possess'd nothing of the Goods or Lands left by Gaudentius, the Slaves ought not to be set at liberty, as he order'd; but if the Church possess'd the Means of Gaudentius, they ought to enjoy the liberty which he had granted them. Yet not to use the utmost rigor, they are content, that in case the Bishop left nothing to the Church, to recompense the loss of these Slaves, they should notwithstanding be enfranchiz'd, on condition that they shall continue in the Service of the Church, and in dependence upon it, and that they shall be disabled to give their wages, i. e. what they can earn, to others than their Children, who shall continue also, they and their Posterity, in the same dependence upon the Church; so that the Goods of those who shall die without Heirs, shall return to the Church. And as to the Slaves which this Bishop left as a Legacy to his Kinsfolk, 'tis ordain'd that the Church shall take them again, if he has not otherwise made Compensation to it for this loss. This Canon extends to all the Slaves of the Province of Bætica, which are taken away from the Church to which they belong by a like Grant. For it says, that it is against Equity and Religion, that he who lives at the Expence of the Church, and gives nothing to it of his own, shall deprive it of those Gifts that are made by others. The Bishops of this Council advertise also the Bishop of Astigis, that they have thought it convenient for putting in Execution the Canon against Clergy-men, who keep strange Women, or Female Slaves in their Houses, which was renew'd a little while ago by the third Council of Toledo, to ordain, that if the Priests, Deacons, or other Clergy-men, do not obey the Declaration of their Bishops, the Judges of the Places may take these Women, with the leave and consent of the Bishop, on condition that they never restore them to the Clergy-men, under pain of Excommunication. As to the Women, they order, that they shall be given to serve Nunneries.

Of Sevil.

It may be that this Council made other Canons besides those which it sent to this Bishop: and indeed Burchardus, and Ibo of Chartres, relate many more under the Name of the Council of Sevil; but their Citations are so full of Faults, that we cannot trust to their Report.

The Council in Arvernia.

Gregory of Tours in the eighth Chapter of the tenth Book of his Hiſtory, makes mention of an Aſſembly of Biſhops held in the fifteenth year of the Reign of Childebert, and the ſixth of Clotharius, held, I ſay, in the Confines of Arvernia, of Gabali, and Rutenium, againſt Tetradia the Wife of Eulalius, Counteſs of Arvernia. This Woman finding her ſelf abus'd by her Husband, who was a debauch'd Man, retir'd by the advice of Virus her Husband's Nephew, with her eldeſt Son to Deſiderius General of the Army of King Chilperic, and hindred almoſt all the Efforts of Eulalius. This Retreat coſt Virus his Life, who was kill'd by Eulalius. The Wife of Deſiderius dying, he made no Scruple to marry Tetradia while her Husband was alive, who for his part raviſh'd a Nun. After the death of Deſiderius, Eulalius being more concern'd for the loſs of his Means than his Wife, demanded Reſtitution to be made of what ſhe had carried away. This Aſſembly of Biſhops order'd, that they ſhould be reſtored fourfold; and that the Children which ſhe had by Deſiderius ſhould be declar'd Baſtards and Adulterous. She was permitted alſo to return to Arvernia, after ſhe ſhould make Satisfaction, and to re-enter upon the peaceable poſſeſſion of the Inheritance of her Father. This Woman was gently treated, and a Canon of this Nature may rather paſs for an Accommodation than an Eccleſiaſtical Deciſion.

The Council of Poitiers.

Of Poitiers

THis Council was aſſembled for reforming the Diſorders of a Monaſtery of Nuns in this City. This Monaſtery was founded by Radegonda, and was at firſt in Subjection to the Biſhop of the place: But under the Reign of Sigebert, Radegonda having brought from the Eaſt ſome Wood of the Holy Croſs, and other Reliques, to put them into her Monaſtery, ſhe pray'd Marovæus, then Biſhop of Poitiers, that he would be preſent at this Feſtival; but this Biſhop went into the Country, becauſe he would not be preſent at this Ceremony. Radegonda pray'd King Sigebert to allow her a Biſhop for placing theſe Reliques in her Monaſtery. Euphronius Biſhop of Tours did it with great Solemnity. Although Radegonda had reaſon to be diſpleas'd with the Biſhop of Poitiers, yet ſhe did all that lay in her power to be reconcil'd to him; but not being able to compaſs her deſign, ſhe fetch'd from Arles the Rule of St, Cæſarius, and put her Monaſtery under the Protection of the King, becauſe the Biſhop would not take care of it. After the death of Radegonda, the Abbeſs call'd Leubovera, pray'd alſo the Biſhop to take it into his Protection. At firſt he refus'd it, but afterwards accepted of it, and took alſo Letters from King Chilperic, which import that this Monaſtery ſhould be ſubject to him, as the other Churches of his Dioceſs were.

There were in this Monaſtery two King's Daughters, Clotilda the Daughter of Charibert, and Baſina the Daughter of Chilperic, who had embrac'd a Religious Life under St. Radegonda. After her death, theſe two Daughters had not Humility enough to obey an Abbeſs, who in the Opinion of the World was not equal in quality, deſpiſing the Remonſtrances of their Biſhop, whom they ſuſpected, broke the Gates, burſt in pieces the Bolts of their Monaſtery, and went out with forty Nuns, under pretence that the Abbeſs had abus'd them. Clotilda went in the firſt place to Gregory of Tours, who adviſ'd her to return, and offer'd alſo to go with her, and to find out a way, with Marovæus's aſſiſtance, to reduce their Abbeſs to reaſon. She would not follow his advice, and went to Court to wait upon King Gontranus. In the mean time the Nuns that went with her out of the Monaſtery, led a moſt licentious Life. Some time after Clotilda and Baſina return'd to Poitiers, they plac'd themſelves in the Church of St. Hilary, with ſome wretched Ruffians, and ſaid that they would never return to their Monaſtery till their Abbeſs were turn'd out. One of the Nuns, who continued in the Monaſtery, being as corrupt as the reſt, feigning that she would be shut up in a private Cell, fled out at a Window, and came to them to be a Witneſs againſt the Abbeſs. The Biſhop of the place finding himſelf not ſtrong enough to put a ſtop to this Diſorder, ſummon'd Gondegiſilius Biſhop of Bourdeaux, Nicaſius of Angouleſme, and Saffarius of Petrocora. Theſe Biſhops came with the Clergy to the Church of St. Hilary, and threatned theſe Nuns to excommunicate them; but they were receiv'd with blows of a ſtick, push'd back, affronted and beaten; ſo that they were forc'd to retire, having excommunicated the Nuns. They wrote to the Biſhops of the Kingdom of Gontranus, who approv'd their Proceedings in their Anſwer, and ſummon'd them to be preſent with them at a Synod which ſhould be held at the beginning of November. In the mean time theſe Nuns continued to commit all ſorts of Outrages and Diſorders, ſo that Childebert was forc'd to ſend an Officer, call'd Macon, to hinder them. Marovæus being afraid of himſelf, ſollicited Gondegiſilius, and the other Biſhops, to remove the Excommunication; but they would do nothing in it. The King Childebert ſent a Prieſt to ſettle this Affair, but he could not do it. This did nothing but irritate theſe Nuns, who ſent their Ruffians to the Monaſtery, broke open the Gates, beat and wounded the Nuns, tore the Abeſs's Clothes, dragg'd her through the Street, and shut her up in a place, from whence ſhe should not come forth, even on Eaſter-day. The Biſhops renew'd the Excommunication pronounc'd againſt them, but they car'd not for it, and continued their Outrages. At laſt Childebert and Gontranus were forc'd to agree among themſelves, that the Biſhops of both Kingdoms ſhould aſſemble to judge them, and to give them a ſtrong Force for hindring ſuch Outrages as they had committed. Theſe Biſhops being aſſembled at Poitiers the nine and twentieth year of the Reign of Gontranus, and the fifteenth of Childebert's (which is the thirtieth according to the vulgar Æra) had this Affair under Examination. They heard the Accuſations which Baſina and Clotilda alledg'd againſt the Abbeſs, and the Defence which the Abbeſs made for her ſelf. They accus'd the Abbeſs of expoſing the Nuns to hunger and nakedneſs, of ſuffering Men to wash in a Bathe of the Monaſtery, of playing at Dice, Tabula, of ſuffering Contracts of Marriage to be made in the Abby, of taking the Sacred Ornaments to dreſs up her Niece. The Abbeſs anſwered, that ſhe had always maintain'd her Nuns as plentifully as the Seaſon would permit; that as to Garments, they had the remainder of them in their Coffers; that ſhe had never ſuffered Strangers to waſh in the Bathe; that if ſhe had play'd, it was while Radegonda was alive, and that ſhe did not think it was forbidden by the Rule or by the Canons, but if the Biſhops ſhould forbid her, ſhe would not do it any more; that ſhe had made no Feaſts, but only receiv'd and entertain'd Gueſts; that ſhe had only receiv'd the Earneſt of the Eſpouſals of her Niece; that if it was a fault, ſhe would ask pardon; and laſtly, that ſhe had not taken any of the Ornaments of the Church, to dreſs up her Niece. On the other ſide, Clotilda and Baſina were accus'd of going out of the Monaſtery, of carrying out with them many Nuns, and of other Crimes and Outrages which we have just now related. This being prov'd, the Bishops found that the Abbess had committed no Crime for which she deserv'd to be depos'd, but only some slight Faults, which they exhorted her not to commit again: And as to Basina and Clotilda, they excommunicated them till they should do Penance, and pray'd the Kings not to suffer them to enter again into the Monastery.

In the Council of Metz, which was held after the decease of King Gontranus, wherein Ægidius Archbishop of Rheimes was depos'd as guilty of Treason, Clotilda and Basina ask'd pardon for their Fault, and they were receiv'd into Communion upon the request of King Chilperic. Clotilda return'd into the Monastery, and Basina spent the remainder of her Life in a Country-house.

The Councils.

The second Council of Metz in the Year 590.

Of Metz.

THIS was an Assembly of Bishops which King Childebert call'd together to judge Giles Archbishop of Rheimes, who was accus'd of Treason. A Duke call'd Ennodius was his Accuser; and the first Article of Accusation which he propos'd against him, was, that he held Correspondence with King Chilperic, who had always been an Enemy to Childebert. He affirm'd also that Chilperic had given him some Lands of his Dominions. Giles confess'd that he had always been a Friend to Chilperic, but he maintain'd at first, that he had done nothing against the Interest of Childebert, and that he had given him the Demains which he possessed. He produced the Grants of them, but they were declared to be forged; for the King denied that he had given him any thing; and Otho the Master of the Requests declar'd that the Subscription was none of his. After this the Letters of Giles written to Chilperic were produc'd, and of Chilperic to Giles, wherein there were Invectives against Brunechildis the Queen. Giles deny'd that he had written the one, or receiv'd the other, but he was convicted of both by his own Domestick. The King accus'd him of being the Author of a Treatise, written for King Chilperic, against Gontranus; and this was prov'd by the Register of King Chilperic. He was also convicted by the Abbot of St. Remigius, of having receiv'd a considerable Sum from King Chilperic. Giles being convicted of these things, and having also acknowledg'd them to be true, the Bishops desir'd three days space to give him time to justifie himself if he could. When the time was expir'd, he appear'd in great Confusion before the Assembly, and said, Why delay you to judge a Criminal? I acknowledge that I am guilty of Treason, that I have deserved Death, that I was always contrary to the Interest of the King and his Mother, and have caused many Wars, which have brought several places of France to Desolation. The Bishops having heard this Confession from his own Mouth, after they had read the Canons, and obtain'd the King's Grace for his Life; he was immediately banish'd to Strasbourg, and Romulfus the Son of Duke Loupus, was plac'd in his Room. Epiphanius Abbot of St. Remigius was also depriv'd of the Dignity of Abbot. There was found a great quantity of Silver in the Cabinet of this Bishop: What of it came from his Robberies, was put into the Royal Treasury; and what was part of the Church's Revenues, was left to the Church. In this Council Basina and Clotilda ask'd pardon for their Fault, and were receiv'd into Communion.

The Assembly of Bishops at Nanterra.

Of Nanterra.

THERE was nothing remarkable in this Assembly, but what was done for solemnizing the Ceremony of the Baptism of Clotarius, at which Gontranus was God-father.

Of Nanterra.

The Council of Saragosa.

Of Saragosa.

THIS Council was held in the seventh year of the Reign of Reccaredus, which was the year 592, on the last day of October. Arthemius Bishop of Tarraco presided in it; ten other Bishops were present at it, and two Deacons deputed from two other Bishops. They made three considerable Canons.

In the first it is ordain'd, that the Arian Priests who are converted, if they give signs of the sincerity of their Conversion, may perform the Office of Priesthood, after they have received a-new the Blessings of the Priests, Benedictionem Presbyterii; but those who shall neglect to lead a Regular Life, shall continue degraded from their Order, although they be among the Clergy. The same thing is ordain'd with respect to Deacons.

The second ordains, that in whatsoever place Reliques are found that come from the Arians, they shall be given to Bishops, that they may be try'd by putting them into the Fire. Those who shall conceal or retain them, are threatned to be excommunicated.

Of Saragosa.

The third ordains, that if Arian Bishops, who are converted, shall consecrate Churches, before they have received the Benediction, they shall be consecrated a-new by a Catholick Bishop.

After this Council follows a Letter from the Bishops to the Receivers of the Prince's Taxes at Barcelona, wherein they consent, that a certain Tax should be levied upon the Measure of Corn growing on the Church-Lands.

The Council of Toledo, held in the twelfth Year of the Reign of Reccaredus, the Five hundred ninety seventh of Jesus Christ, consisting of thirteen Bishops of Spain. It was National.

Of Toledo

THIS Council made two Canons.

The first ordains, that Priests or Deacons who shall not observe Continence, shall be degraded from their Ministry, and shut up in a Cloyster by the Bishop's Order, that their punishment may serve for an Example to others, and for Penance to themselves.

The second ordains, that the Bishop cannot invade the Revenues of a Church or Chappel built in his Diocess, and that this Revenue shall be given to a Priest who shall serve in it, if the Revenue be sufficient for him; if not, that a Deacon shall be plac'd there; and if there be not enough to maintain a Deacon, that at least a Porter shall be plac'd there to keep the Church clean and decent, and to light up the Candles in it at Night before the Reliques.

The Council of Oſca, or Hueſca, a City of the Province of Tarraco; held under the ſame King in the Year 598.

The Councils.

Of Oſca.

THIS Council made two Canons.

The firſt ordains, that the Biſhops ſhall hold an Aſſembly every year, of the Abbots, Prieſts and Deacons of their Dioceſs, to give them Precepts and Advice about the way and manner wherein they ought to live.

The ſecond, that the Biſhops ſhall carefully examine, whether the Prieſts, Deacons, Subdeacons, and Clergy live chaſtly; that if any one is ſuſpected of Incontinence, Information ſhall be given of it, either by the Depoſition of the Clergy, or the Teſtimony of the Notaries, or by examining the behaviour of the Women, with whom he is ſaid to keep Company, or by any other ways which may be uſeful to diſcover this ſort of Crimes; that on the one hand, no Perſon may be blacken'd upon falſe Reports, and on the other, no Crime may be palliated by falſe Excuſes.

Of Oſca.

The Council of Barcelona under the ſame King held in 599, conſiſting of twelve Biſhops.

Of Barcelona.

THIS Council made four Canons.

The firſt forbids Biſhops and Clergymen to take any thing under any pretence, and after any manner whatſoever, for the Ordination of Deacons or Prieſts, which it calls Benedictio Subdiaconii, vel Presbyterii; which explains the firſt Canon of the Council of Sarogoſa, which we have before ſet down, where it is ſaid, that the Arian Prieſts ſhall receive Benedictionem Presbyterii, before they can diſcharge their Office.

The ſecond forbids Biſhops to take any thing as the Price of the Liquor of Holy Chriſm, which they give to Prieſts for confirming the Novices.

The third forbids Laymen to enter into Orders, without obſerving the times preſcribed by the Canons, and ordains, that none ſhall be promoted to Epiſcopal Orders, who has not paſs'd through the inferior Orders, though he has obtain'd the King's Letter, or be choſen by the Clergy, the Biſhop, or the People. This Canon preſcribes a particular manner of chooſing a Biſhop, viz. That the People and Clergy ſhall chooſe three Perſons to preſent them to the Metropolitan and Biſhops of the Province, who ſhall conſecrate him of the three on whom the Lot ſhall fall, which ſhall be done after a Faſt.

Of Barcelona.

The Fourth ordains, that if a Virgin, who has renounc'd the Cuſtoms of the World, and promis'd to obſerve Continence, or any other Perſon, who has deſir'd of the Prieſt Benedictionem Pœnitentiæ, i.e. the Bleſſing for leading a Religious Life; for this is often call'd Pœnitentia & Converſio; that if any of theſe Perſons, I ſay, do voluntarily marry, or being taken away by force, will not part from their Raviſhers, they ſhall continue excluded from the Communion of the Faithful, and ſhall not have ſo much as the comfort of Converſation. This Canon may be alſo underſtood litterally of Penance, becauſe it was not lawful for Penitents to make uſe of Marriage, or to marry.

[* Huetius in his Diſcourſe of the Original of Romances, thinks that this Book might poſſibly have been compoſed by Philander, who impoſed upon M. Fumée, as if it had been really written by Athenagoras. This Dr. Cave ſays is very improbable: But if we conſider how extremely particular this Author is in his Deſcription of thoſe Buildings he mentions how very improbable it is that Athenagoras ſhould have brought in his Melangenia, deſcribing Jupiter Hammon's Temple more like an Architect than an Hiſtorian, we can hardly conceive it to have been written by a Greek. Beſides, the Architecture it ſelf is ſo very exact according to the Rules of the Five Orders, the Four Ancienteſt whereof were introduced firſt by the Greeks; that it is not likely that one of that Nation, who knew very well that Jupiter Hammon's Temple was never raiſed by Men that were acquainted with their Models of Building, would ever have deſcribed it as Built after ſuch a manner, if he had thought fit to have deſcribed it at all. So that though we cannot certainly tell whether Philander, (who wrote Commentaries upon Vitruvius) was the Author of this Romance, or no; yet theſe Reaſons ſeem to make it more than probable, that it was not written by Athenagoras, eſpecially ſince a Greek Copy was never yet produced, and that none of the Ancients ever quoted it, either as his, or as belonging to any Body elſe. And I do not doubt, but Dr. Cave would have been of the ſame Opinion, if he had read the Book over himſelf.]

[† Since the firſt Edition of Mr. du Pin's Bibliotheque was Publiſhed by Mr. Dodwell ſet out the Chronological Fragments of Biſhop Pearſon, with Additions of his own to the late Biſhop of Cheſter's Diſcourſes concerning the Succeſſion of the firſt Biſhops of Rome. In his Additions to the Second Chapter of Biſhop Pearſon's Firſt Diſcourſe, he brings ſome Arguments to prove that this Theophilus, the Author of theſe Diſcourſes to Autolycus, was not that Biſhop of Antioch that was the Sixth from St. Peter, as it has hitherto univerſally been believed. Theophilus ſpeaks of the Perſecution, as of a Calamity the Chriſtians then groaned under, in two or three places, towards the End of the Third Book: Καθημέρας and ἕως τῶν δεῦρο daily and until now. He ſays alſo, that it chiefly lay upon thoſe that haſtned after Virtue, and endeavoured to live a Holy Life, σπουδάζας πρὸς ἀρετὴν ἢ ἀσκήσας βίον ἅγιον. Theſe Mr. Dodwell affirms to have been Proſelytes and Catechumens who endeavoured to live up to the Rules of their New Religion, and uſed great Philoſophical Strictneſſes of Life, as Origen and his Diſciples did, which is properly meant by the word ἀσκῆσας. The Perſecution of Severus was raiſed particularly againſt New Converts, and thoſe that endeavoured to inſtruct the Catechumens in the Chriſtian Faith: for which Reaſon, Origen was ſo ſeverely enquired after; from hence it will neceſſarily follow, That Theophilus, who mentions the Perſecution as a thing that had been of ſome Continuance, which did not begin till the Year CCIII. could not be that Biſhop of Antioch that ſucceeded Maximinus, and preceded Heros.
